ELECTRIFYING NEWS ON ISLAND PLANT

Despite the near monomania the British Columbia government has displayed in its approach to hydro development — the Peace and Columbia have been electrifying election battle cries — it is apparent that what some have called "too much" is not enough.

Now a new form of electric production must be found and the thought of a nuclear reactor on a quiet Vancouver Island bay is giving some people the willies.

Israeli Jets Sink Egyptian Warships

TEL AVIV (Reuters) — Israeli air force jets today sank an Egyptian destroyer and a missile boat at their moorings in the Red Sea, an army spokesman said.

In other action, two Egyptian MiG-17 jets were shot down by Israeli jets in dogfights over the Suez canal.

The spokesman said the Egyptian aircraft were intercepted when they attempted to attack Israeli positions along the canal's southern sector.

No casualties were inflicted upon Israeli forces and all Israeli planes returned safely to base, he said. One of the Egyptian pilots was seen bailing out, he added.

The two planes downed today brought to seven the number of Egyptian aircraft shot down by Israel in the last 48 hours—and to 121 the total of Arab planes downed since the end of the six-day war in 1967, a military spokesman said.

CONFLICT HEATS UP

The Middle East conflict heated up along the canal Friday, while Secretary-General U Thant of the United Nations was reported under growing pressure to reactivate the UN peace mission to the troubled area.

NAMED CHAIRMAN of the Commons environmental pollution committee is David Anderson, MP for Esquimalt-Saanich. Anderson brought pressure to bear for formation of committee and, in unusual honor for a freshmen MP, committee members selected him to head it. Vice-chairman is Phil Givens, the outspoken former mayor of Toronto.

The shooting deaths of two young Negro students on the Jackson State College campus in Mississippi have provoked new protests on some campuses across the United States.

About 20 educational institutions were officially closed and a student strike information centre at Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass., reported student strikes at 282 of the country's 1,500 colleges and universities.

The student strikes and demonstrations began nearly two weeks ago to protest President Nixon's decision to send Amercian combat troops into Cambodia. Later, the demonstrations expanded to include protests against the killing of four white Kent State University students during a confrontation with Ohio National Guard troops, the slayings of six Negroes in Augusta, Ga., and the shooting deaths of the two Negro students at Jackson State.

Many students have begun turning away from the demonstrations and seeking ways of influencing Americans outside the academic community.

SEND LETTERS TO NIXON

Students at the University of Southern California, which has 17,500 students, sent letters bearing 50,000 signatures to the White House protesting the war.

Tories Scolded For 'Unconcern'

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The Conservatives came under renewed criticism from Finance Minister Edgar Benson Friday for being unconcerned about the rise of inflation in Canada.

He said in the Commons the Conservative stand on inflation today is in "sharp contrast to their position of only a few months ago." Opposition parties had lost sight of the fact that Canadians were concerned about rising prices.

Benson was speaking during debate on a Conservative motion calling on the government to change economic policies said to be leading to growing unemployment.

George Valade (PC—Montreal-Ste. Marie), who moved the motion, said the government is "criminally responsible" for the social problems created by unemployment. Government policies throwing Canadians out of work had to be changed.

Benson said the "most intemperate criticism" of the government's policies came from the Conservatives who were in power during the worst postwar period of unemployment.

He slapped labor on the wrist for "declining to co-operate" with the prices and incomes commission in the fight against inflation.

The government was staying with its policy. He said he had "considerable confidence the Canadian people have enough good sense to understand why the government must continue to pursue what is not a hard and difficult course."

War Protest Planned by GIs

By The Associated Press

Observances for armed Forces Day today were cancelled by some military bases across the United States after announcements of planned demonstrations described by peace groups as "the first nationwide GI anti-war protest."

A defence department spokesman said, however, that he knew of no plans to cancel Armed Forces Day speeches by about 50 civilians and military defence officials. He said at least 22 local base commanders had cancelled military participation in parades and other observances.

The "GI Task Force" of the New Mobilization Committee To End the War in Vietnam announced that GIs at 22 military bases would stage anti-war protests in connection with Armed Forces Day. The announcement said anti-war organizations at 43 military installations would participate.

Fort Bragg, N.C. and adjoining Pope Air Force Base, cancelled programs open to the public today. Earlier, GI's United, an organization of anti-war soldiers, had scheduled a peace rally at Fort Bragg and announced that actress Jane Fonda, an anti-war activist, would join them.

GO ON AS SCHEDULED

Fort Hood, near Killeen, Tex., announced that Armed Forces Day celebrations would go on as scheduled despite a peace march planned by the May 16 Committee. The committee said its membership includes 1,000 Fort Hood soldiers.

Col. Bill G. Smith, assistant commandant of the U.S. Aviation School at Fort Rucker, Ala., said Armed Forces Day activities at the base had been cancelled in the face of "continued tensions and unrest throughout the country and specific threats of violence at Fort Rucker."

He said the threats included "bomb threats against personnel, facilities and aircraft." The cancellation, he said, was designed "to ensure the safety of personnel of this area and to deny to those who would use our hospitality as an opportunity to disrupt the tranquility we enjoy."

Brig.-Gen. Howard H. Cooksey, commanding general of Fort Dix, N.J., cancelled observances because of possible danger to the public from a scheduled anti-war protest by several thousand persons.

Rear-Admiral H. A. Renke, commandant of the 9th Naval District, said the U.S. Great Lakes Naval base north of Chicago was forced to cancel observances because of an anti-war rally expected to draw 5,000 persons.

Sailor Drowns In Japan

Reding was aboard the destroyer-escort HMCS Yukon, one of three west coast ships on a tour to Japan in connection with Expo 70. Details of the accident were not available.

He is survived by his wife, Jean. His mother and stepfather live in Langley.

Cambodian Key Battle Shaping

Times News Services

OUTSIDE KAMPONG CHAM — Viet Cong and North Vietnamese forces today smashed into Kampong Cham, Cambodia's third largest city, while other Communist forces encircled three government battalions defending the area.

The Cambodian high command rushed reinforcements by commandeered civilian trucks and buses for what may be the biggest battle of the Cambodian war.

Up to a regiment of North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops surrounding the city were hit by repeated air strikes by American-made T-28 bombers, flown by Cambodian pilots, and by South Vietnamese bombers. Huge columns of smoke rose above the town.

"The situation is extremely grave," said a high-ranking South Vietnamese officer. "The Cambodians may not be able to hold out much longer."

U.S. BASES HIT

North Vietnamese troops launched a third successive counter-attack against American bases inside Cambodia killing five U.S. soldiers and wounding nine.

An officer in the field told Associated Press correspondent Peter Arnett it appeared the North Vietnamese were consolidating their forces and striking back after initial retreat in the face of the massive allied incursion into Cambodia.

The Communist troops hit the American defenders of the newly-built Fire Base Branch in the middle of the night with a hail of machine-gun, rocket and rifle fire.

The Americans lowered their artillery and fired point-blank at the attackers, while air force troops found the bodies of eight North Vietnamese soldiers on the barbed-wire perimeter of the base, about 90 miles inside Cambodia.

The U.S. command said the latest fighting raised American casualties to 132 killed and 506 wounded in Cambodia.

EXPECT MORE

More counter-attacks were expected by field commanders, although U.S. military spokesmen in Saigon said the allied thrusts against North Vietnamese base camps inside Cambodia have restricted the Communists' effort.

Lt.-Gen. Do Cao Tri, commander of the 3rd Corps Tactical Zone west and north of Saigon, said his troops had seized enough military equipment to arm about 60 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong battalions.

Mail Plugs East Offices

By The Canadian Press

Huge backups of mail accumulated in Toronto and Montreal Friday during a work-to-rule campaign by Toronto letter carriers and a 24-hour walkout by inside workers in Montreal to back wage demands.

Disruption of mail services also occurred in Ottawa, Windsor and Sarnia in Ontario but employees in other cities appeared ready to wait for a formal strike vote to be taken Tuesday and Wednesday by the country's 27,000 postal workers.

Rallies of postmen represented by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and the Letter Carries' Union of Canada are scheduled for today or Sunday in Toronto, Kirkland Lake, Ont., Calgary and Edmonton.

The letter carriers are not scheduled to return to work until Tuesday, having both the weekend and the Victoria Day holiday Monday off.

In Montreal, the pile included about 1,000,000 letters and third-class items, 45,000 parcels, 150 bags of airmail and about 14,000 other bags waiting to be unloaded from 38 boxcars.

Montreal's inside workers returned to their jobs Friday night after joining most of the city's 1,130 letter carriers in sessions to study a conciliation board report handed down last week.

Jobless Level 'Catastrophic'

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP)—Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield accused the government today of using the unemployed of Canada to fight inflation in a policy that has no guarantee of success.

Citing the latest unemployment figures, Stanfield told the Newfoundland Progressive Conservative leadership convention that Newfoundland's figure of 14.5 per cent is "more than double a national rate that is already catastrophically high."

The Trudeau government considers that high unemployment "is a perfectly acceptable price to pay for the possibility of checking inflation," Stanfield said.

"The present government was elected by the people of this country on the promise that it would create a Just Society . . . but what could be more unjust than trying to cure the ills of society on the backs of its weakest members because—and make no mistake about it—that is exactly what this government is doing."

And yet, there was no assurance that inflation would be stopped by the restrictive measures the government had adopted. Several economists had claimed their effort would be negligible.

The same restrictions were choking off the effects of its regional development program because they were applied too generally.

The least favored regions are being "squeezed by inflation and tripped up by austerity," he said.

Grand Jury Rebukes Chicago Police Over Raid on Panthers

CHICAGO (AP) — A federal grand jury has rebuked law enforcement agencies involved in a fatal raid on Black Panther party members and a subsequent investigation.

No one was indicted.

The grand jury's 252-page report, issued Friday, says the work of the police officers involved "gives some reasonable basis for public doubt of their efficiency or even of their credibility."

Two Panther leaders, Fred Hampton and Mark Clark, were killed when Negro and white police from the Illinois state attorney's office raided Hampton's apartment Dec. 4 in a search for illegal weapons.

The whole concept of the raid, the jury said, "seems ill-conceived."

The grand jury also criticized seven Panther members who survived the raid for refusing to testify at its hearings. And it had harsh words for the Black Panther party.

"The Panther tactics and policies help create much of the very tension and conflict they have complained of in this and other cases," the jury reported.

The jury was commissioned to determine whether the civil rights of the persons in Hampton's apartment had been violated.

It said it was impossible to determine whether they had been a violation of anyone's civil rights without testimony of the surviving Panther members. They refused to take the witness stand, the survivors said, because the jury was not composed of their peers.

Policemen who participated in the raid said the Panthers fired at least 10 to 15 shots at them, the jury found.

The grand jury said policemen fired 82 to 99 shots.

The police department's internal investigation division "was so seriously deficient" in investigating the behavior of the raiding policemen "that it suggests purposeful malfeasance," the jury said.

The investigations division director at the time of the inquiry, Capt. Harry Ervanian, testified that the investigation was the worst he had ever seen. He agreed with the suggestion it was a "whitewash."

Ervanian and two other high-ranking police officers were demoted Thursday.

State charges against the seven Panthers arrested in the raid were dropped a week ago. State Attorney Edward V. Hanrahan said there was not sufficient evidence to support the charges of attempted murder, armed violence and other crimes.

Fishermen Prepare for Long Strike

HALIFAX (CP) — In its first major drive to gain recognition as the bargaining agent for East Coast fishermen, the militant British Columbia-based United Fishermen and Allied Workers union is bracing for an extended strike. Indications are its preparations are not in vain.

After more than a month of picketing fish processing plants at three Nova Scotia locations, 240 inshore and deep sea fishermen have no indication what the government intends to do and the companies have ruled out any negotiations with the union.

"It has all the indications of an extended dispute . . . basically a strike for recognition . . ." says J. K. Bell, secretary of the Marine Workers Federation.

As 800 processing workers employed by Acadia Fisheries Ltd. plants in Canso and Mulgrave and Booth fisheries at Petit-de-Grat remain idle as a result of the strike, there is increasing concern for the economies of the three communities and the future of the plants.

Booth Fisheries, an American-owned firm, has threatened to close permanently, and there are fears Acadia, heavily mortgaged to the provincial government, could fail. Booth has a $2,000,000 annual payroll.

When the UFAW members began tying up their trawlers in mid-April, the provincial labor minister, Dr. T. J. McKeough, told the legislature the department had no legal position in the dispute since the Trade Union Act classifies the fishermen as "co-adventurers" and not employees, because they share in the profits from the catch.

UNION DISAGREES

Homer Stevens, president of the union which began organizing among Nova Scotia fishermen about four years ago, regards the government's position as unacceptable.

". . . There is this legal-political wrangle over whether fishermen are or are not employees, and our position on this has been . . . that whether the politicians and the lawyers can discover what fishermen really are or not, fishermen do require organization," he says. "Government can act . . . they can use their influence, they don't have to wait for legislation. The ridiculous proposition that fishermen might be co-adventurers went out with the last of the buffalo and the ox-carts."

The companies have indicated they refuse to deal with the union on the grounds that they would be unable to live with the UFAW.

The union, which was tossed out of the Canadian Labor Congress in 1953 because of Communist domination, led the abortive 1967 strike of shore workers in Prince Rupert, B.C., which lasted four months.

Unwilling to consider the union but realizing that the fishermen are determined to become organized, the companies have reportedly told two other unions to seek certification.

Both the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, which already represents fishermen operating out of five National Sea Products Ltd. plants in Nova Scotia, and the Canadian Seafood Workers Union have turned down the proposals and pledged support for the UFAW.

The provincial New Democratic Party, which has no seats in the 46-seat legislature, has come out in support of the union with leader Jeremy Akerman accusing the government of trying to "starve out" the strikers.

He also charged the government's actions indicated collusion with the fish companies.

The frustration of the statement resulted in near violence earlier this week.

RCMP said about 30 demonstrators gathered at a service station where a truck leased by Acadia Fisheries was receiving fuel. When the men failed to disperse, four of them, including a union organizer, were arrested.

B-52 bombers pounded the strategic A Shau Valley in South Vietnam during the night in a further attempt to cut North Vietnamese supply routes. The A Shau Valley is a funnel from the Ho Chi Minh trail into South Vietnam's northern provinces.

In Saigon, the U.S. command announced that thousands more American troops had been pulled back from northeastern Cambodia, from one of a dozen fronts that had been the least productive in smashing North Vietnamese and Viet Cong base camps.

The command would not disclose how many American troops had been pulled back from Cambodia in three announced withdrawals this week. But informed sources said the total numbered 5,800 to 6,000. They said 9,000 to 10,000 Americans remained beyond the frontier in the drive launched May 1.

In Laos, government forces recaptured the Tang Vai outpost of southern Laos Friday, overcoming light Communist resistance, informed sources said today.

Asian Nations Split On Aid to Cambodia

JAKARTA, Indonesia (Reuters) — An Asian and Pacific conference on Cambodia opened here today with an immediate sharp division over the question of arms supplies for the embattled Southeast Asian kingdom.

Cambodia raised the delicate subject, appealing for military and economic aid to help it fight Communist forces opposed to its two-month-old government.

The Cambodian request drew support from South Vietnam, whose foreign minister, Tran Van Lam said South Vietnamese forces now in Cambodia would stay until the new government could replace them with its own troops.

Japan, the Philippines, Malaysia and Indonesia said they opposed sending arms to Cambodia.

Conference sources said these four may attempt to persuade Cambodia to seek only economic assistance.

President Suharto of Indonesia opened the conference by accusing the big powers of dereliction of duty in not acting to prevent the spread of the Vietnamese war into Cambodia. Suharto also called for the removal of all foreign troops from Cambodia.

"If we, too, remain standing idly by," he said, "the situation will deteriorate even further, constituting a source of danger and a threat to peace and security in Asia and particularly in Southeast Asia."

The conference brings together officials from Australia, New Zealand, Indonesia, Thailand, Japan, South Korea, Malaysia, South Vietnam and the Philippines, as well as delegations from Laos and Singapore. Cambodia is present, but is not officially taking part.

All or Nothing Voting Bid Lost

A resolution to request the provincial government for municipal elections every two years instead of annually was defeated Friday at the annual meeting of the Association of Vancouver Island Municipalities in Oak Bay municipal hall.

The resolution from Campbell River said the election for aldermen only are considered to be "off," resulting in the low average participation by voters and "therefore are an unnecessary expense."

It was argued the theory annual elections are required to maintain continuity is not justified because continuity of municipal affairs is and should be the responsibility of municipal staff.

CONTINUITY

Oak Bay Ald. Douglas Watts said his municipality's three new aldermen are very concerned about continuity and felt the advice and experience of other aldermen to be of great value to them.

He said if the entire council is elected at one time, instead of half one year and half the following year, it could result in a whole change of council, which is not a good thing.

But Mayor Ken McDonald of Campbell River replied that if the electorate is going to turn out the entire council "this is their right."

Otherwise, he said, "you are then denying the electorate the right to throw out the entire council in a hot issue."

Duncan Mayor Jim Quaiffe said the public is not too concerned at a change of the whole cabinet in a federal or provincial election.

"If people decide to throw out the entire council over a hot issue, this is their right," he said.

Saanich Ald. Leslie Passmore raised a laugh when he said the last provincial election was less than a year ago and "some of us would like another."

Mayor Kathleen Grouhel of Ladysmith, AVIM president, told the 34 delegates in her annual address that environmental control and visual blight on the Island highway should be a top priority for the group.

Indifference to junk yards and spotty industrial development is going to spoil the natural beauty which attracts tourists, she said.

Union of B.C. Municipalities president, Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis, said the board of trustees of the recently-created municipal finance authority of B.C. met this week and made good progress in setting up shop.

He said it was unfortunate the authority is limited to borrowing money for sewerage, water and pollution control, but "I am confident these will be broadened in the next year or two by the legislature."

The critical challenge of MFA is to combine at-home-sale of debentures to individuals with sales to major financial institutions because "I am not convinced B.C. citizens alone can provide the amount of money MFA will need in the next two, three and four years," Curtis said.

Child, 8 Treated For Drugs

NEW YORK (Reuters) — Police said Friday they are investigating reports that a drug pusher has been injecting heroin into children as young as eight years old and then making them steal to get more drugs.

The case came to light when an eight-year-old girl was admitted to a city rehabilitation centre in Harlem, called Confrontation House after apparently taking heroin for seven months.

Martin Gerst, the centre's assistant director, said the girl was believed to be one of about a dozen children, aged between eight and 11, injected by a pusher who demanded that the youngsters steal for him.

"She is the youngest child I've ever heard of who has been addicted to drugs," he said.

POLICE FIND WEAPONS

At Kent State, police said a search of the 3,316 dormitory rooms on campus turned up a .20-gauge single-shot shotgun and a damaged weapon described as a .25-calibre pistol. Also found were scores of knives, five air pistols, four slingshots and blank-firing starter's pistols, they said.

President James M. Hester of New York University urged establishment of a federal commission on campus violence to look into both the Kent State and the Jackson State incidents.

President Nixon's war policy received new verbal support in New York City when some 5,000 construction workers, longshoremen and white collar workers held another pro-administration demonstration.

In Jackson, city police officers threatened to refuse to testify before a biracial committee named to investigate the shooting deaths.

OPPOSED

About 20 policemen, who were called to testify before the committee's first session, held an impromptu meeting in a city Hall corridor and voiced unanimous opposition to the investigation.

The officers said they were ordered to appear before the five-man committee soon after getting off all-night duty at barricades surrounding Jackson State.

The committee hearing was closed to the public, and it was not immediately known whether the police made good on their threat not to testify. One officer said, however, that the men might voice their protest officially following the session.

Negro students and civil rights leaders charged city police and state highway patrolmen fired rifles and pistols at a group of 100 to 200 students early Friday without adequate provocation.

They branded the killings as "murders" and "a massacre."

Police insisted they fired only after snipers on the campus shot at them. The police volley lasted 28 seconds.

Besides the two dead students, Phillip L. Gibbs, 21, a college student, and James Earl Green, 17, a high school senior, another 14 Negro students were injured, one white student was shot and wounded and a patrolman was taken to hospital after being hit in the head by a brick.

The college was ordered closed until September to try to head off further violence on the campus, which was sealed off by 500 National Guard groops.

U.S. Soldier Kills Mates, Wounds 16

TAY NINH (AP) — An angry United States Army soldier fired into a crowd of soldiers just back from Cambodia today, killing two and wounding 16, military police in this South Vietnam city reported.

Investigators said they were holding one man and looking for another.

The victims were members of a U.S. company that had just returned from Cambodia to rest after suffering more than 50 casualties in action.

They were seated in outdoor bleachers waiting for a show to begin when several soldiers from other units sat down to watch. Some of the members of the unit that has just returned objected to the presence of men from outside the company. A scuffle followed and the uninvited troops left.

Minutes later a soldier returned with a rifle and opened fire on the m watching the show, investigators said.

Newspaperman F. P. Galbraith Dies at 74

RED DEER (CP) — Dr. Francis Philip Galbraith, chancellor of the University of Alberta and publisher of the Red Deer Advocate, died suddenly today. He was 74.

Dr. Galbraith, who was to retire as chancellor June 30 after a six-year term, was born in Guelph, Ont., but came west with his family in 1906.

He took over the editorship of the Advocate from his father in 1934 and remained as editor until March of this year when he retired. He remained active in the newspaper business.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET, JR.

The happy time for those who suffer from stomach ulcers is on the way — the summertime — when the hot weather seems to help dissipate come-and-go ulcers after the gnawing pain subsides in these late days of spring.

It isn't that the ulcers have gone away never to return. It isn't because summer is a more carefree time for most of us. No, the people who experience relief from ulcers when summer comes are the same people who lose most of the pain from ulcers in the winter.

But when October comes around, and then later on in the spring, the old pain will dig in again and the victim prays for a change in seasons. Nobody knows whether it is the seasonal change in diet that may be responsible for ulcers or to blame it on the weather.

TAX RELIEF WITHOUT A MEANS TEST

Rural Boys Claim Magic Formula for Helping Aged

By JIM HUME

HUME

When Alderman Ove. Witt was asked earlier this week what he thought of Mayor Courtney Haddock's proposed community-drop-in-centre, he sighed and said he'd support the idea. The sigh was well justified. Witt, unlike the mayor, knew four drop-in centres were already being operated in Victoria by two detached workers, one from the YM-YWCA the other from the Victoria Boys Club. Their names, just in case they, like the programs they operate have escaped His Worship, are John Durkin and Chuck Tyler.

It would be nice to think that Haddock was advocating a fifth drop-in centre. But the sad thought remains that he wasn't. He, as he has often done during the past few months, was again advocating a program already in existence.

Inside City Hall

The two detached workers are no longer new to the community.

Their programs started in July 1968 when Ald. Clyde Savage chaired the Youth Services committee, a chairmanship Witt now holds.

"It would be nice," says Witt, "to have the feeling that other members of council, especially the mayor, know what you're doing."

On his feet for little more than a minute Baird growled his old theme that this was the year of restraint.

You will, he told the civic leaders, either exercise restraint yourselves or have me exercise it for you.

Baird warned that with 1971 being another of B.C.'s semi-annual centennial years, pressure would be on local councils to borrow money for local projects.

Don't bother to even listen to the pressure groups was his advice. There will be no borrowing for non-essentials.

"I shall refuse all requests for borrowing. I shall approve nothing except expenditures for sewers and water."

"I'm aware of the interest in pollution. But even so, even though it's like being against motherhood, we must show restraint."

A forthright man, Jim Baird.

He tells us that Premier Bennett is broke in such a blunt, yet deceptive, way.

Ald. Tom Christie raised a few hackles at the same VIMA meeting when Saanich presented its resolution seeking tax relief for senior citizens on fixed incomes.

Before presenting the resolution Mayor Hugh Curtis read a letter of strong support from Scott Wallace, MLA for Oak Bay. The letter pledged all the help possible to gain relief for the elderly on fixed incomes.

But it didn't win the support of Christie.

His was the lone vote against the motion.

Grumbled he in his crankiest voice: "I'm against it. It's too general. It sounds like the means test would be the only way to make it work."

He wouldn't budge under attack, even mid-way through a delightful steak lunch served by Oak Bay council.

"You're advocating a means test," he grumbled at Central Saanich Mayor Archie Galbraith. "And I'll never be in favor of a means test. How else could you find out whether people can meet their obligations or not?"

"There is a way," answered Galbraith. "Come out to Central Saanich and we'll show you."

* * *

That was the end of lunch, but maybe somebody will take the rural boys up on their offer and publish the formula that could cut the taxes of fixed income Islanders without Christie's feared means test.

Warrant Issued In Beating Death

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police Friday issued a warrant charging a Kansas man with manslaughter in the death Thursday of a city employee who tried to prevent a man from beating two dogs.

Police said they seek John Paul Jones, 32, identified only as a native of Kansas.

Reginald Perrins, 57, of nearby Haney, as dead on arrival at hospial Thursday from cerebral contusions caused by two blows on the head and aspiration of stomach contents.

Police said a witness said Perrins jumped from a city truck and attempted to intervene when he saw a man hitting the dogs with a rolled-up magazine. The man attacked Perrins, the witness said.

What Goes On?

THE HASSLE THAT HAS arisen over the proposed provincial park at Cape Scott, at the northwestern tip of the Island, finds the Social Credit government sadly lacking in that public confidence which it might welcome at this moment. The government's record in regard to permitting industry to push into established parks for mining or lumbering; in regard to juggling park boundaries, permitted by the Parks Act but making a mockery of any pretensions to genuine protection for parklands; in regard to preserving wilderness areas untouched for today and for future generations — the record is such a sorry one that public suspicion as to the real intentions at Cape Scott are understandably very much alive right now.

The threat which hangs over the proposed 38,000-acre ocean-front park — one of the most admirable park concepts which the government has announced — is that rich copper deposits may be on the site and these would certainly be freed for exploitation by the government if they proved economically feasible. The parks department and mining interests in the cabinet are therefore apparently at odds over the fate of the land. On the basis of past experience it is not hard to pick the likely winner if the mineral is there in any workable quantity.

But mineral discoveries actually within the proposed park boundary are not the only danger. For large strip-mining operations, if carried on around the limits of the park, would ruin the adjacent landscape and probably also some of the many watercourses which are an attractive feature of the Cape Scott area.

This is not just a matter of disposing of some wilderness land. Apart from the notable park value of the site, with its typical, rugged seacoast, its waterfowl grounds and varied growth, there is a particular interest for the public of British Columbia. It is in this area that several parcels of land totalling 576 acres and valued at $300,000 were recently acquired by the government as part of the future park. And the price that the people of the province paid for them was $10,000,000 worth of timber in Strathcona Park.

This "trade" was lauded by Recreation Minister Kiernan as a splendid bargain. Now, with the Strathcona Park timber in the hands of the Raven Lumber Company of Campbell River, there is serious doubt that we will even get the full benefit of the parcels of land at Cape Scott. If copper is found in quantity in the northern area the people may well end up with neither the Strathcona Park timber nor the promised Cape Scott park.

What the cabinet — waiting for further mineral studies of the area, which may take two or three years yet—may do will depend to some extent on what the public chooses to do about the matter. Public silence will mean consent. This government is a particularly dollar-conscious group, but election ballots make good legal tender, too.

United States Arms for Greece

THE NIXON ADMINISTRATION has displayed an unnerving penchant for disregarding world opinion during the past two weeks. Tumultuous events in the United States and Southeast Asia last week all but eclipsed the foreign policy decision — not yet officially confirmed but firmly taken — to resume arms shipments, including jet planes, to the Greek military dictatorship.

United States arms aid to Greece has slowed to a trickle since military coup overthrew the legitimate Greek government three years ago. Turning off arms aid to Greece was a subtle way to indicate to a NATO ally that the United States was not happy about Grecian democracy being snuffed out. There was also much pressure on the United States to take a hard line with the Greek colonels by Western European nations who remember too well the fruits of fascism.

Later this month when NATO allies meet in Rome many observers expect a stormy session over the resumption of arms sales to the Greeks. There is even talk that Denmark, Norway and perhaps Belgium and Holland will leave the alliance, or severely curtail their activities within it as a result of the Greek arms issue. With so much at stake it is difficult to understand the United States position.

The Greek colonels apparently see Communists under every pamphlet, using this worn pretext to gain new arms, yet there are no enemies pressing at Greek borders. The tragedy of the situation — after revelations of torture and mass arrest under the colonels — is that the United States arms will probably be used against the Greek people.

A Memory Stays Green

THROUGHOUT THE WORLD, where the memory stays green, tributes will be paid next month to the achievements of Charles Dickens on the 100th anniversary of his death, June 9.

This will be an occasion for a revival of interest in the man who has been called England's greatest novelist. The world, including the thousands who have formed Dickens Clubs, knows him as a social revolutionary and a supreme story teller.

The period of Dickens' life is remote from the space age and all that has intervened since he, a man honored and revered in his own time, caught a wide and durable public for both his written words and his readings. Many of his characters live under different names today. And the economic malaise of the moment traces at least one true bloodline to the comment of Wilkins Micawber.

Dickens is out of date, old-hat, a memory of a past century. Yet the shades of personalities he created walk the street of any town in 1970, and at Christmas time the Cratchit family and Scrooge return to tell a story that continues to ring true.

From 'Heroes' to 'Heroes'

TO THE CZECH PEOPLE WHO enjoyed liberalization under the Dubcek regime — and lost it when the Warsaw Pact nations rattled sabres on instructions from Moscow — there is pathetic irony in ceremonies attending the recent visit to Prague of Soviet Party Chief Brezhnev and Premier Kosygin. The two chief figures of the U.S.S.R. were declared "heroes of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic" at a function in which the current Czech leaders, hand-picked by the Russians, expressed appreciation for the Soviet intervention of August, 1968.

Earlier these same Czechs had been honored by Russia during a visit to Moscow for doing what the Russians wanted. Now the Czechs have honored Brezhnev and Kosygin, also for doing what the Russians wanted — a return of courtesies, perhaps, but hardly a quid pro quo as the people of Czechoslovakia see it.

Letters

Hurray for B.C.

Having recently returned from a trip to Japan and Expo 70, I would like to use your columns to express our appreciation to the government of British Columbia for providing such an outstanding pavilion at the fair.

The British Columbia Pavilion is quite possibly the most refreshing and enjoyable exhibition at the fair; of the 27 pavilions that we visited, only in British Columbia's did the rather stolid Japanese break their cool with enthusiastic applause. — G. P. A. Pollen, 3470 Upper Terrace.

Let Unions Support Them

The comment of the secretary of Victoria's Labor Council, Mr. Ryan, that it is the right of the locked-out construction workers to collect welfare is ridiculous.

Why not have their unions support them? It is to the unions that they pay millions of dollars in dues and it is the unions that got them into their present predicament.

I have no sympathy for these people who have forced their wages and our cost of living out of all proportion.

I wish only that the employers have the determination to keep these people locked out until they are prepared to work for reasonable wages. — "A disgusted taxpayer."

FROM QUEBEC CITY

By RICHARD PURSER

An Ovation for Bourassa's New Cabinet Team

Purser

THE new cabinet of Premier Robert Bourassa has received an almost rapturous welcome. Its urban origin (12 of the 22 members are from metropolitan Montreal or Quebec City), its youth (average age of members is 41), and its orientation toward technocratic and administrative expertise are regarded in political and business circles as exactly what modern Quebec needs. A new optimism is the order of the day here. It was evident immediately after the April 29 election gave Quebec a government at once stable, new, and federalist. Money is already less jittery and the real estate market is showing signs of firming up. Optimism was reaffirmed with the presentation of the well-structured cabinet on May 12 — but hope for the future was doubled by the announcement, barely an hour earlier, that Montreal would play host to the 1976 Olympic Games. Aside from demonstrating the international community's revived faith in Quebec's future, preparation for the games will be a tremendous economic shot in the arm.

When Mr. Bourassa commented that "even if it's not until 1976, this will definitely help to relaunch the economy of Quebec," he had reason to be happy — this alone will take care of his campaign promise of "100,000 new jobs." He can build from a higher level now.

Building a convincing cabinet to see Quebec through what should be exciting years ahead was no easy task. Well before the election, Mr. Bourassa expressed the hope that he would have a number of "big names" as elected members of the National Assembly from which to select his cabinet. He approached a number of leading Quebec intellectuals to run as Liberal candidates, but without success. He wound up with plenty of members, but few whose names could be considered household words — perhaps only Pierre Laporte, who earlier fought Mr. Bourassa for the party leadership, Mrs. Claire Kirkland-Casgrain, the only woman to succeed in Quebec politics, and old party warhorse Bona Arsenault.

Sense of Reality

But examination of the qualifications of his 71 colleagues did turn up a plentiful supply of candidates who, though not famous, had proven their ability in fields requiring knowledge and hard work. So the cabinet is one of solidly educated administrators with a strong sense of reality, which prompted one intellectual — editor Claude Ryan of Le Devoir — to remark that they will probably lack the touch of arrogance that might accompany a high-powered team of ideological prima donnas, which is as good a summary as any of the meaning of his French term "equipe du tonnerre."

Noteworthily absent from the cabinet was the above-mentioned Bona Arsenault, too old for the new team at 67 despite his unexpected win with an increased majority over a highly-favored Parti Quebecois candidate. In fact, there is only one cabinet member over 50 — Murice Tessier, 56, minister of municipal affairs and public works, experienced in his field as a long-time mayor and former head of the Quebec Union of Municipalities. Long known as a party idea man, he backed Mr. Bourassa before it became fashionable.

Mr. Laporte is back in the cabinet as Mr. Bourassa's chief political aide. A master parliamentarian, he will be government house leader. He will have a considerable burden to bear, as Mr. Bourassa has promised to spend more time at his desk and less listening to speeches in the Assembly. Mr. Laporte was with Le Devoir before entering politics, achieving wide repute as one of the first journalists to crusade against the misrule of the late Maurice Duplessis. He will also be labor minister. In Quebec this post requires a man with above average political experience, which Mr. Laporte has.

Mrs. Kirkland-Casgrain, who along with Mr. Laporte is among the four new ministers who were members of the Liberal government during the 1960-66 period, is back as minister of tourism, an industry of vital importance here. She is a Montreal lawyer, an effective fighter for women's rights, and a fashion plate at 45.

Also back from ministerial experience in the old days of Jean Lesage are Gerard Levesque, 44, then and now minister of industry and commerce, and Bernard Pinard, then and again minister of roads.

The rest are new young technocrats:

Claude Castonguay, 41, a political freshman pulled from the provincial civil service by Mr. Bourassa to run in the April 29 election in Mr. Lesage's old Quebec City riding and to become, if elected, health and welfare minister, which he now is. He earlier headed a major actuarial consulting firm, masterminded the provincial pension plan, and headed a provincial royal commission on health and social welfare.

Guy St.-Pierre, 36, minister of education, who has an unusual background as civil engineer and engineering businessman and graduated from London's Imperial College of Science and Technology.

Impressive Start

Raymond Garneau, 35, an economist, educated here and in Europe like many of his colleagues, and an expert in governmental know-how as executive assistant to Premier Lesage.

Kevin Drummond, 38, with a McGill, Harvard Business School and Sorbonne background, has worked with both federal and provincial governments, is a political newcomer and will have the important lands and forests portfolio.

William Tetley, 43, corporation lawyer and Dr. Victor Goldbloom, 46, pediatrician, two of the best-known spokesmen for the anglophone community, now respectively revenue minister and minister without portfolio.

And ten others, all with demonstrated ability and two just barely over 30 years old.

While it is too early for prolonged applause considering the awesome tasks ahead, Mr. Bourassa is off to an impressive start as a team-builder, which, was an essential first success if he is to govern effectively.

HOW? WHEN? WHAT CONDITIONS?

By WILLIAM R. FRYE

Seeking a Consensus on the American Withdrawal

Frye

EFFORTS by doves in Congress to force an unconditional American withdrawal from Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia contrasted this past week with an administration pledge to have all combat forces out of the front lines by July 1, 1971. The two positions seemed far apart, at first glance, and in a sense they were. But there was an element of agreement between them — and this agreement is coming to represent something of a national consensus.

It is that American disengagement from the Vietnam conflict is overwhelmingly desirable at the earliest feasible time.

The difference is over what constitutes "the earliest feasible time." The consensus breaks down over the question "How?" "When?" and "Under what conditions?"

It is something, however, that the over-all objective should now be visibly agreed. This fact is sometimes lost sight of in all the furious in-fighting over means and timing.

Closing the Gaps

The next step in seeking a full consensus would be to begin closing the gaps over when and how. And this task may not be as formidably difficult as it may seem.

One of the country's more rational and articulate doves, Prof. Edwin O. Reischauer of Harvard, a former ambassador to Japan, analysed the problem for the American Society of Newspaper Editors in San Francisco this past week.

If the American withdrawal is too slow, Reischauer said, there could be a major blow-up in the United States — a prediction which events of recent weeks have certainly tended to confirm.

Such a blow-up could lead, in turn, to a rightist reaction, equally disastrous, he warned. It could also lead, he said, to a belief in Europe and in Japan that the United States is "accident-prone" and unable to extricate itself from the difficulties it encounters.

Too fast or, as he put it, too "jerky" a withdrawal could have equally damaging results, he acknowledged.

It could produce a general impression that the South Vietnamese had been "betrayed," and hence a humiliation for the United States, bringing in its train an extreme form of neo-isolation — Americans seeking to withdraw not merely from future military commitments but, more seriously, from all the problems of the underdeveloped "third world."

These problems include especially the vitally important one of conquering the explosive poverty, hunger and ignorance which torment that part of the world and may provide the biggest perils of the next generation.

As in the case of an unreasonably delayed withdrawal, Reischauer said, too swift a pull-out would bring upon the United States a severe and damaging external judgment. It would produce a conviction that America was not a desirable or a safe partner for the future.

The ideal middle ground — a negotiated withdrawal — being in all likelihood a will-of-the-wisp, the problem is to reconcile "too slow" with "too precipitate."

Where is the centre of this spectrum?

One solution, advocated not merely by Reischauer but by the Democratic Party Policy Committee, is that a fixed timetable for total withdrawal be set and adhered to rigidly.

If the South Vietnamese were not ready to handle the war, by, say, the end of 1972, as they might not be, the United States would — according to this theory — pull out anyway and not be blamed for the consequences.

The effect of such a program, however, would be, at the very least, to eliminate all remaining likelihood of a negotiated political solution.

The key participants in an ultimate accord would have to be the North and South Vietnamese. American withdrawal would put great pressure on Saigon to negotiate, but the North Vietnamese would have little motive to do so.

The theory that they would become amenable once they had succeeded in evicting American influence — a theory Reischauer seemed to embrace — is very hard to credit.

And the result of putting Saigon under this kind of gun could be the world-wide impression of betrayal which it was one major American purpose to avoid.

Involves Fewer Perils

Secretary of Defence Melvin Laird was closer to a practical compromise. His pledge to have all United States forces out of combat by July, 1971, is a long step in the direction of a timetable for withdrawal, but one which involves fewer perils. It logically should be an acceptable basis on which dove and hawk could converge.

Support forces could, under this plan, lend needed stiffening to the South Vietnamese thereafter. With their help, Saigon would have a reasonable chance of survival.

Neither Saigon nor Hanoi could expect full victory, and each would have something to gain from negotiation.

Most, if not all, of the support troops could eventually consist of volunteers, not draftees. They would be in minimal danger from enemy action. Only men willing to accept this degree of risk would be sent to the scene.

It is hard to see how there could be any serious objection to such a program if the national interest is paramount.

But there is reasonable hope that a major proportion of thinking young people can be persuaded of its merits. And if that happens, the extremists thereafter will find it much more difficult to muster a mob.

Nature Rambles

By FREEMAN KING

An excellent example of ecological change is provided in the area on the north side of the Thetis Lake Park panhandle just east of the power line. It can be reached through the gate at the top end of Francis Park.

This section was logged off several years ago. Now there are scattered clumps of tall spindly Douglas firs that were left. They are twisted by exposure to the winds from all sides.

Several arbutus trees stand out with their reddish-yellow trunks. Many of them have broken limbs extended like arms. They are now in bloom and perhaps they will provide food for the birds in the fall. Scattered around them one can find new seedlings that have a quite different leaf. The young leaves have very fine-toothed edges.

As the sunlight was let in the ocean spray became dominant on the sides of the slopes and where there was soil on the outcrops of rock. In the low places the red alders have taken over and these trees will thin out and provide shelter for the new crop of conifers that surely will come. If you look closely you will find many new seedlings of Douglas fir growing.

Where there were ponds and sloughs the hardack and willows are flourishing and reclaiming land from the water. In turn they will make soil for other plants. This process has lowered the water table which will effect further changes lower down the valley.

Many sun-loving plants are now established, including the seablush, camas and stonecrop.

There are a number of snags still standing. These provide a very good place to see the pileated and downy woodpeckers, as well as the little nuthatches and brown creepers. In this area many of our song birds have established themselves, for they love the sunlight.

If one traces the little ponds along the way he will see that at one time they were joined by a small stream. In a number of places you can find clam shells left there by the Indians of long ago who used these waterways on their annual trek to the highlands, perhaps for berries, perhaps for their summer camps.

If this area is left alone it will, in the fulness of time, once again become a new forest, but it can never be the same. The ponds are gone.

Religious Beliefs Not Dying, They're Just Changing Forms

By ARNOLD TOYNBEE
The Listener

From a British Broadcasting Program

TOYNBEE

As I see it, religion is a built-in feature of human nature; it is an inevitable accompaniment of the consciousness that is mankind's distinctive characteristic.

We are aware that we have awakened to consciousness in a universe that is mysterious to us; and the heart of the mystery has not been brought to light by the progress of scientific knowledge.

Today we are as much in the dark as ever about how or why (if there is any reason why) we have come to be what we are. We are painfully aware that our human nature is an incongruous combination of two discordant elements: the animality that we share with all other living creatures from our fellow-mammals down to bacteria, and a spirituality that is, we think, uniquely human.

We're Different

Our human spirituality makes us human beings something different from other animals and something more than what these are. Our human experience informs us that the universe in which we find ourselves is not solely material and biological.

There is also a spiritual presence; and this prestige is 'beyond' and 'above' both the universe and ourselves. (I say 'beyond' and 'above' because we have only a spatial vocabulary for describing spiritual realities.) Since we are human and therefore conscious, we feel a need to establish communication with this 'higher' spiritual presence.

We want to get into touch with it in order to bring ourselves into harmony with it. The impulse to meet this need is religion; and I believe that, for a human being, to have religion is inescapable: A human being may believe sincerely that he has no religion, but in moments of crisis his religion will assert itself.

Spiritual Plane

When he is confronted with his own imminent death, or when he is afflicted with bereavement, disappointment, self-reproach or any other form of acute spiritual suffering, he will find himself living, even if only for a moment, on the spiritual plane which he has tried to dismiss as an illusion.

I therefore feel certain that there is a future for religious belief. So, for me, the question is: What kind of religion is likely to prevail in the future for so far as we can see ahead?

Ever since our ancestors became human, we have been groping for the spiritual presence behind the universe. We have been trying to comprehend its character, and we have also been trying to live in harmony with the character of this higher spiritual presence, in what ever form we have caught our glimpses of it.

The glimpses are the crux. They have given very different pictures of the ultimate spiritual reality in different times and places. These different pictures have been reflected in different religious beliefs, and these different beliefs have led to different precepts and practices. Thus, several different kinds of religion compete for our adherence.

To which of the competitors are we going to give our allegiance in this next chapter of mankind's history? This is, for me, the capital question.

Man's earliest glimpse of the spiritual presence behind the universe was caught through the medium of non-human nature. When our ancestors awoke to consciousness, they found themselves at the mercy of their non-human environment.

Control Destiny

Here, then, as they saw it, lay the power which controlled their destiny and to which they must therefore accommodate themselves.

The higher presence reveals itself dramatically in thunder and lightning and in earthquakes and tornadoes, and, perennially, in winds, rain and the seasons, in springs and rivers, in forests and mountains, and in man's own prey and crops and cattle—for even these were only partially under the control of the earliest hunters and cultivators and shepherds.

Man's vision of ultimate reality through the medium of non-human nature faded away as man mastered nature progressively, and the nature-worshipping kind of religion might have seemed dead and buried for good in the modern age. In this age, man has succeeded in reversing his original relation to nature.

At the start, man was nature's slave: today, nature has become man's slave. But at this moment of our technological triumph we are just beginning to realise that nature has enough divine power in her to be able to take her revenge on us for the violence that we have done to her.

We have discovered that we are in nature's hands after all; that nature is a less cruel mistress than technology; and that, if we continue to violate nature, we may extinguish our species. For the sake of self-preservation, we may be going to recapture something of our reverence and respect for nature.

We may be going to recognise that, after all, nature is one of the media through which we need to seek our contact with the ultimate spiritual reality that is beyond both nature and ourselves.

Asia to Lead

I expect to see this recovery of a regard for nature come first in Eastern Asia; for there it has never been wholly lost. It survives, for instance, in present-day Japan, though Japan is now outstripping the West in the development of technology.

If this guess is right, it may be important since, in the next chapter of history, Eastern Asia seems likely to play the leading role that Europe played during the last few centuries.

The religion that has supplanted nature-worship — but this, I hope, only temporarily — is the worship of human power. As soon as we human beings began to get the upper hand, we also began to imagine that the clearest manifestation of ultimate spiritual reality was through ourselves.

Human power is multifarious. It is both collective and individual, both political and economic.

The worship of human power has therefore taken the diverse forms of worshipping Pharaoh or Caesar; worshipping communities, states, churches and other institutions; and worshipping technological power — 'atoms for genocide' as well as 'atoms for peace'.

Human Power

The worship of human power in some form has been man's predominant religion for at least the last 5,000 years, and it has never before been so dominant as it is today.

Nationalism is about 90 per cent of the religion of about 90 per cent of the present generation. The other 10 per cent goes to the worship of technology, but we can forsee that, in the next chapter, technology-worship is going to drive nation-worship off the field.

Nation-worship is divisive, but technology has united the whole surface of our earth to serve either as an arena for genocide or as a common home for an affluent human race.

It seems likely that our present worship of Britain, Nicaragua, France, Laos and the rest of the 125 present local states will be superseded by the worship of a world-community.

Today all but a tiny fraction of mankind adheres nominally to one or other of the religions that aim at direct communication and harmony with the ultimate reality. The surviving religions of this kind, enumerated in the order of their age, are Buddhism, Judaism, Parseeism, post-Buddhaic Hinduism, Christianity and Islam.

A Sham

The nominal adherents of these six religions add up, together, to an overwhelming majority of the human race. Avowed worshippers of human power —i.e. fascists and communists—are still relatively scarce; avowed nature-worshippers are now even scarcer.

But this conventional picture is misleading. Most of the nominal adherents of the higher religions can be counted out. Their adherence has become a sham.

They may still adhere with their lips to Christianity, or Buddhism, or whatever their ancestral higher religion may be, but in their hearts they are now worshippers of human power—the regimenting power of a state, a church, or some other institution, or the nature-conquering power of technology.

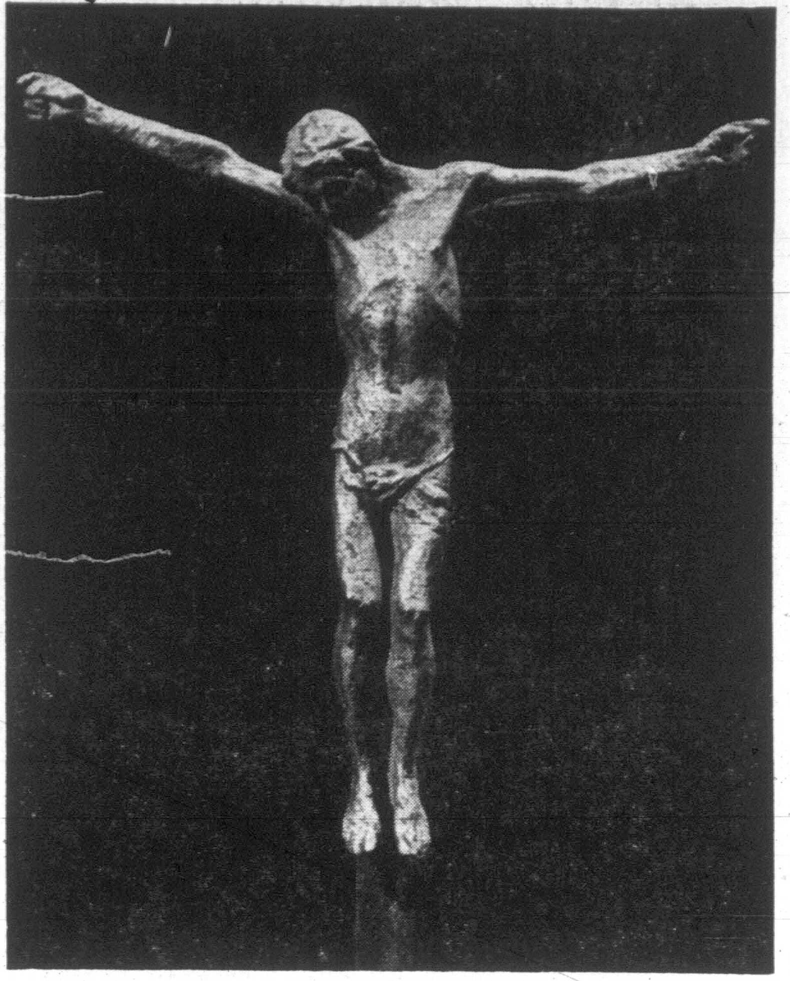
Are our ancestral higher religions going to be superseded in fact by the worship of human power? Or are they going to recover the hold that they once had on the majority of mankind?

Mutual Hostility

The answer to this question depends on the answers to two others. Will these religions succeed in extricating their essential beliefs and precepts from elements in their traditional creeds and practices that are non-essential and that have become unacceptable today?

And will they succeed in overcoming their traditional rivalries and enmities with each other? This second question is bound up with the first, because the historic religions' mutual hostility is part of the non-essential tradition of each of them.

In the modern age, one of the most hidebound of all the surviving higher religions has been the Roman Catholic section of the Christian Church, and the present upheaval in the Catholic Church is therefore particularly interesting and significant: if the Catholic Church succeeds in rejuvenating itself, we can be optimistic about the prospects of all the other institutions in which the various forms of higher religion are incorporated.



Resurrected

The work of rejuvenation is being contested, but we may guess that the opposition to it will be overborne, and that the Catholic Church — and the other contemporary religious institutions likewise — will come out of the present upheaval, not wrecked, but resurrected.

If this is the outcome, we may expect, as a result, to see the historic higher religions regain an effective hold on many of those nominal adherents of theirs who at present are nationalists or scientists at heart, even though they do not admit, even to themselves, that their real religion is not the one that they profess.

All the historic higher religions will regain credit if, besides putting their own houses in order, they overcome their traditional animosities towards each other. In the post-Christian world, for the last three centuries, odium theologicum has been a byword.

The rancor of the different historic higher religions towards each other has been surpassed only by the mutual bitterness of the warring sects within each of them. Probably nothing has done as much as this to bring religion itself into disrepute.

Happily, one of the few promising turns that human affairs have taken since the Second World War has been the ecumenical movement, and, happily again, this impulse towards reconciliation has not been confined to the different branches of the Christian Church. There has been a parallel rapprochement between the different sects of Buddhism, and between the different higher religions themselves—for instance, between Buddhism and Hinduism, between Judaism and Christianity, between Christianity and Islam.

Esteem, Love

The desirable relation between the different religions and between their different sects is mutual forebearance, rising to charity, esteem and love. This is the heart of the matter.

It is not necessary that the different sects and the different religions should coalesce, if they can manage to remain separate without remaining at enmity with each other. Indeed, in the field of religion, multiplicity and variety may be positively good.

So, is there a future for religious belief? I feel sure that there is. I do not feel sure that the religion of the immediate future is going to be a religion of the highest kind.

We may succumb to the worship of human power, which, in my judgment, is an authentic form of religion but an evil form of it. Or the historic higher religions may regain the ground that they have lost.

They seem unlikely to make this recovery unless they rejuvenate themselves, and, if they fail to rejuvenate themselves, they will, I fear, be supplanted, in everything except name, by the evil worship of human power.

If that happens, the outlook for mankind will be dark: but my expectation is that the higher religions will be rejuvenated and will then prevail.

They Want to Be Airborne Again

By ART STOTT

Some of the old Victoria Y boys who made Canadian Olympic and Commonwealth Games teams, and some of the still older boys who made the Victoria Y, gathered at dinner Thursday night to honor Bruce Humber. Bruce steps into British Columbia's Sports Hall of Fame at the Banquet of Champions in the Vancouver Hotel Tuesday evening, along with former Victoria Y boys Art Chapman and Bill Parnell. In that select company they join a number of other old Victoria Y boys.

* * *

Bruce sprinted for Canada in the 1936 Berlin Olympiad on the team coached by Archie McKinnon and later coached the Canadian track team at Helsinki in 1952, while Archie was coaching the swimmers. These were incidents in a still continuing association between the two men. They accounted for the substance of the main talk Bruce gave at the dinner. From his mouth it became largely a testimonial to Archie. The people present were in an excellent position to understand why. The ex-national champions and near-champs there were McKinnon proteges.

In addition to paying a well-deserved tribute to Bruce, the dinner, organized by the current Y physical department, sought to revivify the old Flying Y clubs that flew to provincial and national eminence in time past. Of recent years, Y athletes haven't been winning many major track and field or swimming laurels.

Making champions is not, of course, the primary purpose of the Y. The objective is more specifically aimed at giving a rounded development to the young membership. Better a thousand youngsters learn to swim than that one become a gold medalist. But the gold medals help. They improve the image, give boys and girls a goal to aim for and bring the club—and hence the Y — highly valuable publicity.

* * *

Humber, and McKinnon who introduced him, reminded the group of the means by which the champions were made. Their facilities were minimal in this town. But when the best performers hit the peaks, made Canadian teams and competed internationally, they came back to Victoria and helped coach Y youngsters. They gave their time, the benefit of their experience and technical knowledge to the kids.

They were, they thought, discharging a debt, paying back something for what they had received. The kind of help they had been given had not been measured in dollars. It had been the kind that came from dedication, the sacrifice of time and a huge expenditure of encouragement, enthusiasm, loyalty and that indefinable attribute of leadership which welds team spirit.

* * *

One of them remembered the hour or more a day Archie took off from what should have been a break for relaxation and dinner, to coach a young diver at the Crystal Garden because there was no springboard at the Y. Others recalled unlimited time spent in the steamy little pool in the old building, with burgeoning competitors swimming around its edges because it was too small for up and down lengths, or club nights at the Garden where space was available for better practices.

For some of them, recollection recaptured summer evenings on the lumpy rugby field at Victoria High, where sprinters, distance men, jumpers and field specialists pounded out the conditioning and techniques that brought them to the top.

Fresh to mind came the young people who had helped Archie, taking over the various loads in swimming and track. Bruce was one of them. Their number is too large to list, but they are remembered and respected.

They didn't have any money to speak of. On occasion races were delayed while the competitor in the event just completed shed his spikes so the competitor in the one coming up could use them. And Lynn Patrick's old track shorts used to come flying in ahead of Lynn's new ones when Joe Addison wore the discards. That was the way it went.

Thanks to Bruce, Archie, Bob Hutchison and a host of others we have good track facilities now. Affluence has provided competitors with the necessary equipment. And the Y hopes to start flying again. To help finance the rebuilding it is creating a special sponsors' club. Anybody with five bucks can contribute. Most of us hope it works.

* * *

We remember, though, that when the old Flying Y was airborne, it flew almost without financial fuel, and we remember also that the hungry athlete, provided he isn't emaciated, is often the one who fights his way to the banquet of champions.

LOOKING AT ART WITH GORDON RICE

The Canada Council has been collecting contemporary Canadian art for some three years now. The staff of the National Gallery in Ottawa selected a group of paintings from the Council's collection for a touring exhibit, and this exhibit is now in town. It will be at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria through May 24.

There can be no doubt, regarding the nature of this doubly selective process, that the artists represented here are among the most highly praised in Canada. The work seems for the most part strong, sensitive, and clearly evolved. Could one ask for more?

* * *

Most of these artists have chosen to express themselves within two or three styles. While originating in New York, the hard-edged style (which along with "pop" pervades most of this show) can now be considered fairly international. It is marked by flat, evenly colored shapes and hard, simplified outlines.

The jurors of the Council and the National Gallery may be correct in perceiving that the best work being done in the country is in fact being done largely in this international style.

Looking at it optimistically, we must assume this, rather than think that the hard-edge style is the preferred one as such. That is, if you agree that it is not style that matters (cubist, psychedelic, realist, op, etc.) but how well the artist has used the style.

Style does not guarantee excellence, or indicate the lack of it. New, original, even very personal styles cannot guarantee excellence either, though we often forget this.

What we might wonder then is why so many of our most talented have preferred the international hard-edged style. Many would say that being a new style it affords the freshest, least explored possibilities.

Is this really true? I wonder if sometime soon it won't be more evident that the buildings we make, the cars, the fashions, advertising, as well as pop and hard-edge art, are all of a piece. That far from being really avant-garde the work conforms to fairly conventional limits, that is, the taste of the times.

There is much to admire in "edge" work, and I think to be alive in our response to it we have to view it a number of ways. The impersonality of this painting, some of it as austere as our great glass-front buildings, has been praised for its purity, and even its lack of egotism.

* * *

One really could doubt the selflessness however, especially where artists are concerned. Most of us are on "ego trips" and that seems to be our cross. As for purity, we might distinguish the purity of really sensitive work, such as Bonnard's or Matisse's, from the purity of the untouched, or barely touched canvas. That is another matter. In the latter case the point is soon made, and doesn't gain interest with repetition.

In this respect a comparison could be made with puritanism, the last great stand of which is reflected everywhere in the over-clean, sterile, precise, tight, cool, and uniform spaces and furnishings we have built around us.

The big flat stripes and rectangles do convey strong sensations of color in plenty, that's true. But so do high-toned billboards and fullpage ads in bright reds and blues, or suave ochres and grays. Do we not crave something of a relief from all this, something natural, and less of a hard sell?

* * *

Artists and critics boast of our no longer imitating nature. The impressionists followed nature closely. I would say they did not imitate nature, but that they became somehow natural, they merged with nature and reflected it, as does water. Their marvelous paint quality and subtle colors had roots in their love of nature and the world which was beyond man's power of invention, beyond our plastic flowers.

The painters of today so often seem to have lost all contact with such sources, such nourishing roots. I would not accuse them of not following their own hearts, because I do not know them that well. What seems evident is that they have faithfully followed each other, and in the way North American society has shown them.

Art Dealers' Heyday in Japan

By JOHN CANADAY

TOKYO — A couple of New York dealers agreed in conversation recently that there was a good chance that the biggest art market in the 1970s might shift from North America to Japan.

Since both of these dealers anticipated the shift from Paris to New York while the going was good, their prophecy may be listened to respectfully. And apparently, they are not alone. In Tokyo you will spot, now and then, a figure familiar from Madison Avenue. It is a New York dealer's representative casing the joint.

According to the Japan Times, an English-language newspaper published here, a few months ago a team of Japanese "art experts," for which it is safe to read "entrepreneurs," brought over from France a collection of 500 paintings and sold out in eight days. The paintings were hardly Picassos, but the point is, they sold.

The team is now in France again and plans to come back with 800, which they will pick up "in Paris and southern France" over a couple of months. That is a short time and a lot of paintings, and indicates the readiness of the Japanese to trust a foreign label on things cultural.

If the label isn't foreign, the style should be, and it should not be too modern. Just modern enough. There are very few Japanese collectors who are ready to buy works by young Japanese artists of the kind whose work we see in New York, and there are virtually none who is willing to trust his own judgment when they do risk the purchase of contemporary work.

They much prefer a voguish American reputation to a promising Japanese, even when the local boy has made good in Manhattan.

The rich Japanese businessman, eager to display his new affluence, has learned that a painting on the wall is a prestige symbol (rivalled only by Johnny Walker Black Label and Napoleon brandy in the liquor chest) and he wants to pay a high price for a product that looks both familiar and modern.

What he will buy most readily is indicated not by the work in the Minami gallery and the Tokyo gallery which serve as two-way traffic channels for major contemporary New York reputations and the young Japanese who follow them, but by some pretty awful paintings in half a dozen plushy little picture shops specializing in tenderized versions of Soutine, Rouault, Vlaminck, Utrillo, Bonnard, early Matisse and, biggest of all, Raoul Dufy—all these by Japanese painters who have an awesome talent for imitating a style while disembowelling it.

There is also a popular and productive Japanese Renoir school, heavy on his late period, although imitations of Monet have for some reason never caught on. There is a lot of cheap surrealism but no abstractions, not even cubism.

•

Meanwhile, Tokyo's department stores are the barometer of the current state of things. On Sunday, the Japan Times lists the week's exhibitions, and last Sunday there were 44 in galleries and museums and 13 in department stores.

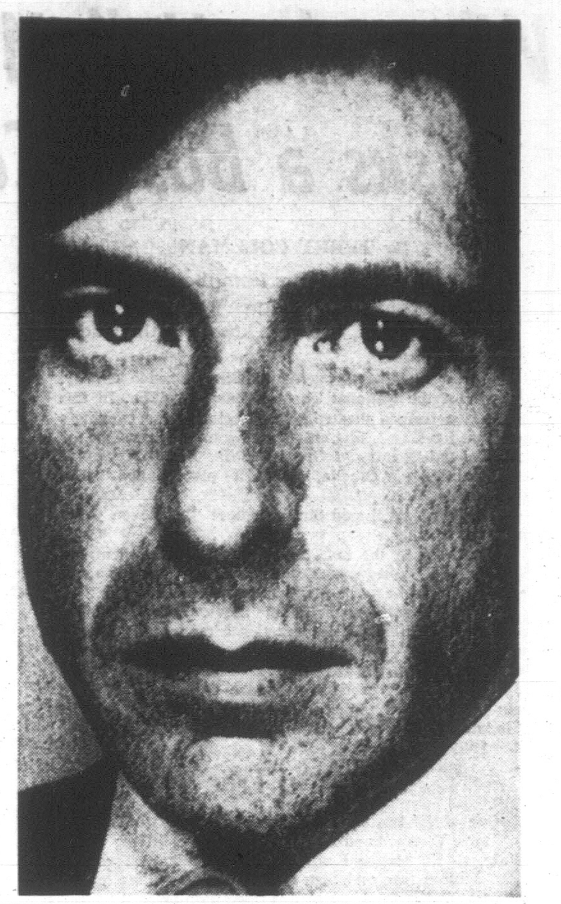
Leonard Cohen: Tangled Beauty, Insight



By GEORGE OAKE

There must be some sneering Canadian literary critics secretly eating their hearts out at the news that "freaky" Montreal poet Leonard Cohen is packing them in to rave reviews at London's Royal Albert Hall this week. As usual they bet on Emily Post poets and lost again.

Tracing the development of Cohen's garden is like chasing a saint through Elysian fields. Some of the blooms have been trampled, others are transformed into gold and a few perennials have gone strange. But amid the tangle there is great beauty and insight.

No plaster of paris statues molder on Cohen's lawn. He creates his own from plastic resin, examines and remembers them in their shining amorphous hour, and then departs before they solidify and disappoint him.

In his first novel, The Favorite Game, we are introduced to Breavman. Tightly bandaged in the myths of Montreal's wealthy Westmount, Breavman comes down from Mount Royal, not unlike Moses, and peels off the adhesive of friends, family and lovers. By book's end Breavman is alone, naked and bloody, but ready to go on. The tragedy of jagged broken relationships which he has left behind him will nourish his garden.

Two books of poetry — Let Us Compare Mythologies and Spice Box of the Earth — preceded the first novel and echo many of Breavman's themes.

In Spice Box several poems explain how Breavman cannot be bound to any one relationship for very long.

Lost in the fields of your hair I was never lost
Enough to lose a way I had to take;
Breathless beside your body I could not exhaust
The will that forbid me contract, vow,
Or promise, and often while you slept
I looked in awe beyond your beauty

And in Mythologies one of the most recurring themes presents Cohen-Breavman as the magician who turns banality to beauty and beauty sometimes to lust.

With all Greek Heroes
Swarming Around My Shoulders,
I perverted the Golem formula
And fashioned you from grass, using oaths of cruel children for my father's chant

Thus we have Breavman the magician using hypnotism in Favorite Game as a catalyst in one of his first seduction attempts.

"... As she undressed Breavman kept thinking of the illustrations in the pulp Hypnotism for You manuals he knew by heart. Line drawings of fierce men leaning over smiling sleeping women."

Both these themes are central to Cohen's earlier work. Breavman is in the middle of everything, yet only a part of Breavman really takes part. The rest of Breavman is a cold professional who writes about the powers that come with art and examines the prosaic Breavman threading his way through a maze of human obstacles in search of sainthood.

No plot obscures Cohen's lyric writing. Rather the reader is treated to beautifully edited cinematic portraits. Using these brief films, Breavman probes various episodes in his life. In fact we are introduced to his family through a home movie. Other times it is Mozart heard over a public address system or a Brueghel portrait that weaves Breavman's tendrils together.

But it is in the company of others, especially his boyhood friend Krantz, that Breavman shines, turning his "quarrelsome heroes" into gold, as Cohen sings in one of his new albums. The dialogue between Krantz and Breavman as they interpret the world to one another is devastating and as sharply honed as any Canadian writing.

"Krantz, I know you hate this kind of question, but if you'd care to make an off-hand statement, it would be appreciated. To your knowledge, that is, the extent of your information, is there anyone on this planet who approaches the dullness of the Canadian prime minister?"

"Rabbi Swort?"

"Krantz, do you honestly submit that Rabbi Swort, who as the world knows, is not exactly the Messiah or even a minor messenger of the Redemption, do you seriously suggest that Rabbi Swort challenges the utter and complete boringness of our national leader?"

"I do, Breavman, I do."

"I suppose you have your reasons Krantz."

"I do, Breavman, you know I do."

"There were once giants on the earth. They swore not to be fooled by long cars, screen love, the Red menace or the New Yorker magazine. Giants in unmarked graves."

▣

A long quote but a revealing one as to the ironic dialogues that fill the novel. This is one of the few techniques that survives in the second novel, Beautiful Losers. Gone is the poetic language. Breavman becomes the narrator and F. is several extensions — magician, madman and consummate sensualist — of the good old Breavman in Favorite Game.

The tightly edited lyric qualities of Favorite Game explode into a thousand shards of raw prose. Cohen gushes forth. His beautiful losers are four: Catherine Tekakwitha, a virgin Mohawk saint of the 16th century, F., the strange politician-plastic saint who tries to lead the Narrator with his asthma and constipation through the emptiness of modern "freedom" to sainthood and the Narrator's wife Edith.

Each of them marches to a private distant drum but this is their strength; they are greater than the bloodless world around them. Catherine rejects the body; the others embrace it with an un-self conscious lust. In a real sense they represent the insane, homosexuals, perverts, Indians and black people—the whole gamut of original human beings who have been rejected by the soft machine of corporate efficiency.

As F. says, to be black in the 20th century "is the best feeling a man can have in this century." Or as the frustrated Narrator screams, "What about us with asthma? What about us failures? What about us who can't shit properly?"

In another fundamental passage Cohen describes the saint: "Far from flying with the angels, he traces with the fidelity of a seismograph needle the state of the solid bloody landscape."

▣

For me Beautiful Losers is a tour de force. A magnificent garden has developed from a few carefully nurtured flowers. This in no way negates the achievement of Favorite Game which, in my arrogant opinion, makes most other English-Canadian novels of the past decade seem amateurish in comparison. But the first novel only probed where Beautiful Losers slashes.

Breavman's lover Shell resides as a saintly, poignant memory in Favorite Game while Edith, the Narrator's wife in Beautiful Losers is crushed in an elevator suicide. The martyrdom of Cohen's lovers has gone from mental to physical.

In Favorite Game the boy idiot-genius Martin Stark — the first beautiful loser to appear in Cohen's prose — is crushed by a tractor in a contrived scene; the later losers are multi-dimensioned saints. Poor Martin could only count blades of grass and mosquitoes.

Cohen's poetry appears to be preparation for a novel. Two poetry volumes preceded Favorite Game and one, Flowers for Hitler, antedated Beautiful Losers. Flowers for Hitler was a departure from the earlier love-introspection oriented poems and introduced a cast of thousands. Politicians, freaks and dictators; the beautiful losers surfaced.

Business as Usual was evocative of what was to come in the second novel.

The Most precious secret has been leaked:
There is no Opposition!
Over-zealous hacks hoist the P.M.
Through the ceiling. He fools an entire sled-load of Miss Canada losers
by acting like a gargoyle.

This is not one of the best poems from the collection but it illustrates the sharp break with Cohen's lyrical past and it is funny.

In terms of writing Beautiful Losers was a hard act to follow. Trouper Cohen offered a thin poetry volume entitled Parasites of Heaven, followed by New Poems which were included in a volume of his selected poetry. Parasites seemed to be a helter-skelter collection of all the ideas that went before — a perspective, if you like.

The new poems, on the other hand, root among the old introspections about love. In the meantime Cohen, like the pop saints he creates, had become enshrined and he uses this sainthood in his work. In New Poems he writes, "I've sung to a thousand people and I've written a small new song."

The two long-playing recordings recently issued under his name have put the mandarins of the Canadian literary establishment on their collective ears; and their parochialism and caution probably explains why they never could hear him after Beautiful Losers.

It is tempting to portray Cohen as the great Canadian writer but he is more than that. He uses his nationality like his religion, whenever it artistically suits him. Beautiful Losers, which transcends any geographical or mental boundaries, is at the same time a Canadian novel. We are all there.

Catherine Tekakawitha evokes beautiful descriptions of a pastoral Canada that none of us will ever know. But the seeds of what kills saints were at work then. The modern losers barrelling down the highway between Montreal and Ottawa in a phantasmagoria of sexuality were conscious of how these seeds had grown into a forest of desolation.

Canadians weaned on E. J. Pratt and the Group of Seven will have difficulty with Cohen and many may even be disgusted. He doesn't make it on Literary Nights at Rideau Hall.

A generation before Cohen, Mordecai Richler wrote the Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz. Like Cohen's Favorite Game, it was about a Jewish boy growing up in Montreal. Unlike Breavman, Duddy Kravitz had an obsession with making a buck. The times have changed, Breavman looks for love and meaning.

As Cohen sings today, we are all "just Josephs looking for a manger." He is right on.

Search for Trade, Wisdom

By HUMPHRY DAVY

The Middle East has always fascinated the English-speaking peoples, especially the 19th century middle-class Victorians steeped in Bible studies dealing with the Holy Land, Egypt and Persia.

And if today the area still retains some magic for many it is mainly due to the British, first attracted there by trade and later by adventure, art antiques and archaeology.

They were everywhere — travelling through what was then barbaric regions, climbing mountains, collecting plants, digging up ancient tombs, installing oil pipe lines, building roads, railways and constructing irrigation schemes.

But apart from physical accomplishments, the knowledge they acquired through travel and experiences resulted in an immense contribution to English literature. They provided English writers with an abundance of ideas and forms to draw upon — especially during the 18th and 19th century.

THE BRITISH IN THE MIDDLE EAST by Sarah Searight. Ryerson. $13.95.

Art benefited too. If English art dealing with the Middle East was exhibited today in one gallery, (it would have to be a large one) its volume and quality would astonish the world.

The Middle East was also a vital link or roadway to India and politically this was Britain's main interest in the region.

But this book — the latest in a series dealing with the social history of the British overseas — deals only lightly with the political history of the Middle East countries. It concentrates instead on the people to whom we owe so much of our early knowledge of the area.

Mrs. Searight first describes the development of trade between England, Turkey and Persia. It actually started in the Elizabethan era and appears to have been well established by 1600.

From then, right through to the 18th century, the East exerted a strong influence on European arts and fashion. For example the first Turkish bath was established in London in 1679 and coffee houses, also originating from Turkey, were going concerns during this period.

It is interesting to read how coffee drinking was promoted.

Pasquee Rosee, a proprietor of a coffee house, used extravagant language to entice innocent ale drinkers to the new and at that time expensive addiction.

In a handbill he writes: "It so incloseth the orifice of the stomach and fortifies the heart within, that it is very good to help digestion, and therefore of great use to be taken about three or four o'clock every afternoon, as well as in the morning.

"It much quickens the spirits and makes the heart lightsome; it is good against sore eyes, and the better if you hold your head over it and take in steam that way. It is excellent remedy against the spleen, hypochondrial winds and the like . . ."

In 1665, Charles II solemnly 'declared his resolution of setting a fashion for clothes', which he vowed that he would never change — all his attendants must wear "Persian vests."

This thirst for knowledge — to see the wonders of the East first hand, was aptly expressed by James Elroy Flecker in his poem "The Golden Journey to Samarkand."

It is a romantic poem — but it was romance and adventure — a yearning to explore desolate places — which brought many young men to the Middle East.

Their books and reports on their travels are still read today.

One of the most interesting chapters deals with antiquarian trophy-hunting in the 18th century and the development of archaeology in the 19th.

During the latter part of the 18th century European collectors ransacked ancient sites for antiques of all sorts for use in landscaping of gardens.

As Mrs. Searight notes, by the end of 18th century no landscaped garden was complete without a tasteful of busts, torsos, vases and capitals conducive to the fashionable mood of melancholy.

There are still gardens in England displaying some of these curios.

Later in the 19th century with the development of archaeology, the British Museum and similar institutions, vied with each other for antiques, works of art and artifacts.

Egypt was the scene of the most spectacular discoveries and also of the development of the science of excavation, in which preservation took precedence over removal.

In some cases, whole temples were taken down piece by piece and shipped abroad.

Today this may seem to be a deplorable practice. But European archaeologists felt justified in exporting these objects to their homelands.

The natives had no use for them. For example, a winged bull — a work of art — was sold by the Pasha of Monsul for 'three and sixpense' and burnt into lime by its purchaser.

Another interesting chapter deals with tourists, and there were thousands who visited Palestine and Egypt during the latter part of the 19th century. Egypt was a health spa for the wealthy — Palestine the Mecca of Christians.

The text of this worthwhile volume is complemented by 150 illustrations — many of which have never been published.

Humans as Test Animals?

CARSON

By NELSON BRYANT

Frank Graham Jr.'s "Since Silent Spring" emerges with exquisite timing as governments promise to wage war against pollution.

The pollution Graham writes about is that of air, land and water by pesticides. "Since Silent Spring," of course, has reference to Rachel Carson's classic and controversial study of the subject published in 1962.

Graham traces, in meticulous detail, the reaction of industry, scientists and politicians when the hitherto largely unquestioned value of DDT was challenged by Miss Carson, a hard-headed, hard-working, honest and immensely gifted woman who may eventually be regarded as the leading conservationist of this century.

SINCE SILENT SPRING by Frank Graham Jr. Houghton Mifflin. $6.95.

He also, at least to this reader's satisfaction, reaffirms, as others have done, that Miss Carson's fears were not groundless and there are even greater dangers from pesticidal pollution than she envisioned.

Some may argue that Graham, a magazine writer and editor for Audubon Magazine, overstates the dangers, but one does not purchase life insurance with the certain knowledge that one is going to die next week.

Many people believe that the death of a petrel, an osprey, a bald eagle, or finfish and shellfish because of environmental contamination by pesticides is an early warning to mankind.

Many do not like to think of mothers breastfeeding their children with milk that contains four, five, six or seven times the concentration of DDT permitted by the Federal Government in food and milk sold in stores.

Many do not like to think of Phytoplankton — part of the broad base of the marine food pyramid — being robbed, by DDT, of its present capacity to produce more than half of the world's oxygen.

And many are satisfied that because DDT can cause cancer in mice and rats it should be regarded with more than cursory suspicion. Is it necessary to use humans as laboratory test animals?

No one wants insects to rule the world, although there is evidence to suggest they might do better than man, but that is not the only alternative.

Insects can be kept in check by so-called biological controls, by target and non-persistent, rather than broad-spectrum and persistent, pesticides. This approach will be expensive, but the economic argument loses validity if its dictates will result in a wasteland.

The importance of this follow-up to Miss Carson's work cannot be overstated, and it should be read by all who believe that we hold the earth in trust for succeeding generations.

An Ode to Bella Coola

By TORCHY ANDERSON

The coast of British Columbia is a battleground where the full weight of the surging Pacific pounds relentlessly the ponderous majesty of the Coast Range. The result is a land of awesome beauty which even man, with a few exceptions, has failed to disfigure.

No one spot on this coast, perhaps, better combines towering glacier-clad peaks, tempestuous snow-fed streams and the cathedral beauty of inlets that seem to await an echo, than Bella Coola.

BELLA COOLA by Cliff Kopas. Mitchell Press. $6.95.

Cliff Kopas has written a book about Bella Coola, a story that runs from shamans to bull-dozers, from legend to fact, from the supernatural to the whine of the chain-saw. He does not claim it is history in the strict sense but he has set down a story that is always interesting, sometimes fascinating.

Bella Coola was Mackenzie's road to the Pacific, it was the hard trail of disappointed Overlanders, whose golden dreams in the sixties failed to pan out. It was very nearly the terminus of a trans-Canada railway.

Cliff Kopas treats the Indians with respect. He does not try to hide some of the horrors of their religion but these are offset by some of the horrors of the white man.

He takes the reader through from the earliest suggestion of history, to the coming of Norwegians who found there something of their own land, to the community effort of the Dirty Thirties which finally connected Bella Coola with the interior of British Columbia.

The book is the result, the author tells us, of 40 years of collecting stories, reminiscences, diaries, clippings, letters and photographs. Much of it may not be history to suit the academic critic, but it is vastly interesting and carries with it the atmosphere of the high mountains and deep inlets. Interesting photographs add to the book.

What the Hell More Do I Want? Asks a Busy, Content Olivier

By TERRY COLEMAN

Three hundred years from the Old Vic, on a London bomb site, are three workmen's huts stuck end to end, of a type known in the trade as Terrapin 19.

In one of these wooden huts Sir Laurence Olivier, director of the National Theatre, has his office. In this office is a framed theatre bill advertising the evening's program for May 7, 1814, at Drury Lane, but just right for the National Theatre of Great Britain, 1963-70. It was a double bill — "Othello," and a play called "The Woodman's Hut."

In his bit of the hut, having come from rehearsing Shylock, he talked about his trees. He had planted hundreds when he had a place in the country.

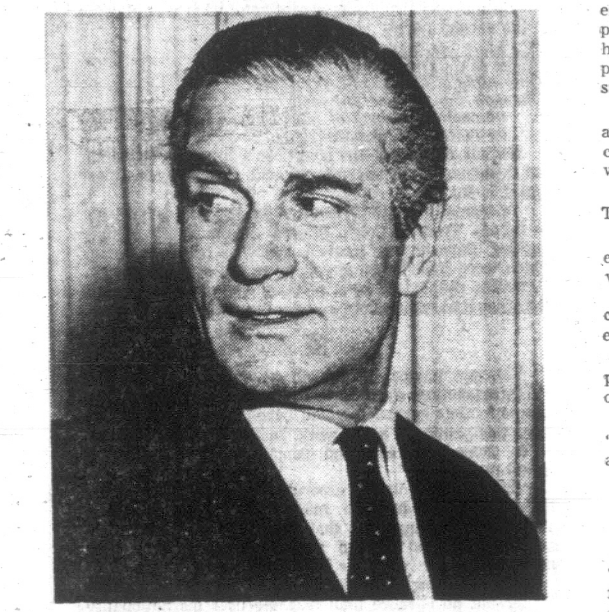
"Limes, whole avenues of limes. Oaks, Willows, cricket-bat willows. Oh, divers flowering trees. I always wanted to: I don't know why. A complete walk, half lime, half nut. Poplars, the tall kind. An orchard of apple trees. My friends and I used to give each other trees. I gave some friends two umbrella pines from Ischia. When it gets known, people give you, oh, jasmine for Christmas."

Plant a Tree

One of the two parts he most loves is that of Astrov in "Uncle Vanya," and at one point Astrov, talking of his estate, said, "Maybe I am just a crank but . . . when I plant a birch tree and then watch it put forth its leaves and sway in the wind, my soul is filled with pride."

Sir Laurence says he is a devout worshipper of Chekhov. He has just finished filming "Three Sisters" at Shepperton, directing, and also playing Chebutikin, the old army doctor.

He grew long hair and a beard to save an hour a day in the makeup room. It was the twenty-sixth film he has appeared in since "Hocus Pocus" back in 1929, and the first he has directed since "The Prince and the Showgirl" in 1957, with Marilyn Monroe and himself.



SIR LAURENCE OLIVIER

In making the sets for "Three Sisters," Svoboda used 250 miles of pink and grey string, hung on oak frames to make the walls of the house, or else hanging free, like gauze behind a few real birch trees to give the illusion of an afforested garden.

Olivier says: "Seventy years lend enchantment to an author's work, so you ought to give it an unreality to make reality appear more real. When Chekhov was alive the designers would show him a door-knob, and say look it's a real door-knob, it isn't painted on. And Chekhov would say all right, but the theatre was art: if you cut the nose out of a portrait by Rembrandt and got someone to push his own nose through the canvas, it would be real but it would be a bad painting. And that's the judgment I came to, without making any judgment, but instinctively. Real, real trees, and real, real grass, wouldn't make Chekhov more real."

Must Be Cajoled

I asked why Sir Laurence had decided to play Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice," which the National opened on April 28. He said he had asked two other actors, who declined, so he was doing it for want of anyone better, as a last resort.

But you're nobody's last resort!—"I'm reaching an age when I have to be cajoled, caressed, persuaded, stroked, before doing anything on the stage."

Since his recovery from cancer in 1967, hadn't Sir Laurence subjected himself to almost the busiest two years of his life?

In the autumn of that year he toured Canada with the National, giving 42 performances in three plays in six weeks. "A little tough, I admit," he says.

Then, although he had appendicitis in 1968, he had continued to play the captain in "Dance of Death," had filmed that play, had appeared as a general in the film of "Oh, What a Lovely War" and as the chief of Fighter Command in "The Battle of Britain," had gone again to America, done "Three Sisters," and was now rehearsing Shylock. "Busy," he said. "But I'm not a rich man, I haven't got much money; I worry about my children and the future, dying and leaving nothing, and my wife with three hulking kids."

Someone popped his head into the hut to say that if Sir Laurence didn't hurry he would miss his train home. "Going to have to make a dash, sir," said the chauffeur, as the vast car drove through heavy evening traffic to Victoria station. This limousine is the only bit of necessary luxury anywhere round the National.

He Knew Archie

How early in life had he been attracted to the theatre? As a boy, when his father was an Anglican parson, very High Church, he had been pleased, as an acolyte at his father's services, with "the sweet singing and the merry organ and the feeling of a show." The instinct that made him an apt acolyte later made him a showman. Of any play he says: "What matters is whether it's a good show or not."

There are two parts which more than any others show him not only as an actor but as a man. One is Astrov, the man who plants the trees. The other is Archie Rice in John Osborne's "Entertainer," a has-been comedian in a dying music-hall, but all the same a showman down to his yellow shoes. "I've taken my glasses off. I don't want to see you suffering," patters Archie. "Thank you for that burst of heavy breathing. Don't clap too hard — it's a very old building."

Olivier does not see Archie as what he might have become himself if the gods had not been with him, not exactly, though in the 1920s he auditioned for concert parties, and would have taken a job with one, and been happy as Larry Olivier. But all the same, he says, he can play the part intuitively. He knew Archie. In 1926-'27 he shared digs with lots of Archies.

And yet, offstage, Olivier is the most unactorly man, and is almost always unrecognized. Except that even in casual conversation, or even when he is tired, the sound of words never deserts him.

In conversation on the train, talking of the national Theatre: "It is the chief labor of my life."

In a television interview, about Hollywood in the early 1930s: "I needed the lick of luxury of those lush valleys."

In conversation, agreeing that the National Theatre cannot pay its actors the salaries they could command elsewhere: "But they do not starve or want."

In conversation, explaining why he had immediately published the news of his cancer: "I knew it would get out, so I said look, it's like this . . ."

In court, giving evidence for the defence in the "Saved" prosecution, answering counsel who formally asked him to state his occupation: "I am an actor, sir."

On Stage 45 Years

In the train, I asked him about that last answer — "And what else could I have said? I have been an actor for 45 years: it would have been self-important to say anything else."

He and Joan Plowright have three children: Richard aged eight, Tamson aged seven, and Julie Kate who is three and a half, but he does not want any of them to go on the stage unless they are really good. "The little girl seems to be an actress, but what little girl doesn't?"

In April, 1967, just before his illness, Olivier went though a crisis at the National. He wanted to stage Hochhuth's "Soldiers." The theatre board thought the play grossly maligned Churchill, overruled Sir Laurence, and turned the play down. The night their decision was announced, Olivier in his office, looked near despair, and said he was going away for a while to lick his wounds.

How did he now feel about that? He said he was not sure he would have put the play on in the end, but what hurt was that he had asked the board for time in which to think, and perhaps change the play, and he had been refused. Had he been near resigning? — "I was bitter. But resigning? No, that would have been an hysterical thing to do. Actors are not the most theatrical people."

When the new National Theatre on the South Bank opens, in say 1973, what play will he present on the first night? — "Something old. They're going to be there looking at the theatre, not paying any attention to what's happening on stage I wouldn't dream of putting on a new play."

Olivier is now fit. It is difficult to keep up with him as he walks, at least when he is catching a train. He is 62 but doesn't look it, and had to age himself a lot for Chebutikin in "Three Sisters." He is restored in spirit.

"What now?" I asked, as the train pulled into Brighton.

In the theatre he has nothing firm in mind after Shylock. The film of "Three Sisters" will be seen this summer. For himself? — I've got a wonder wife, angelic children, a company to run, what the hell more do I want?"

Bergman Film Classics Coming

Six classic movies by the internationally famous Swedish director Ingmar Bergman will show at the McPherson Playhouse during the weekend of May 22-23 and Saturday, May 30.

* * *

This is the first film festival in Victoria in several years. High Wind, a Vancouver promotional group, is sponsoring the festival, which it bills as the Theology of Ingmar Bergman.

Like Joseph Conrad's novels, Bergman's films investigate moral and spiritual problems in a brooding atmosphere of doubt.

INGMAR BERGMAN

Bergman has successfully balanced these sombre themes with brilliant, austere photography and excellent acting.

His work is characterized by sadness punctuated with silence. Until recently, his films appeared to be part of a continuing search for God, a journey which received its most thorough development in three movies commonly called the Bergman Trilogy.

* * *

These are Through a Glass Darkly, Winter Light and The Silence. Each of these is part of the festival here. The others are The Seventh Seal, Wild Strawberries (some critics consider this one of the 10 best films ever made) and The Virgin Spring.

On Friday, May 22, The Seventh Seal and Wild Strawberries will show. Saturday, May 23, The Virgin Spring and Through a Glass Darkly. Saturday, May 30, Winter Light and The Silence.

* * *

Nearly all of these works have appeared on television, but none are likely to be that familiar to Victoria audiences. At his best, Bergman evokes sympathy, understanding and even warmth for his troubled characters.

His work carries layers of complex personal and religious symbols linked to his characters' problems.

With a larger budget, they hope to afford programs of Godard, Fellini, Truffaut and Bunuel movies.

Tickets are available at the McPherson for $2.50 a night. Programs begin at 8:30 p.m.

Marriage Claim Ties Up Estate

LOS ANGELES — The $162,500 estate of Inger Stevens will remain unsettled pending a Superior Court decision on the claim of a Negro businessman that he married the blonde actress nine years ago.

Miss Stevens, 36, died April 30 after being found unconscious in her Hollywood Hills home. The coroner blamed an overdose of barbiturates.

Isaac L. Jones, 40, asked the court Monday to appoint him administrator of the estate, saying he married Miss Stevens in Tijuana, Mexico, in 1961. Public administrator Baldo Kristovich opposed the claim, saying there was no evidence of the marriage.

Another Triumph . . .

LONDON — Sir Laurence Olivier and his wife Joan Plowright scored a triumph together as Shylock and Portia in a new production of The Merchant of Venice in Victorian dress here.

The play at the Old Vic Theatre won an enthusiastic reception from the first night audience last week. Sir Laurence presented Shakespeare's Jew as a top-hatted, frock-coated gentleman full of venom and pride who finally dwindles into self-pity.

The characterization fitted well into a highly original production by Jonathan Miller which succeeds unusually well in keeping the balance between the dramatic and the romantic interest of the play.

* * *

In Miller's Nineteenth Century Italy the intensity of Shylock's drama is not allowed to quench the gaiety of the lovers, and the tension of the trial scene gives way to a last act full of delightful comedy in which Joan Plowright shines brightly.

Her spirited, humorous Portia, whether in lawyer's disguise or in bustled dress, is altogether an enchanting creation.

She even manages with ease Miller's daring treatment of the casket scene in which fairytale topples into farce when Portia's unsuccessful suitors are portrayed as a fierce Negro and a dithering old man.

* * *

Opposite her, Jeremy Brett cuts a fine romantic figure as Bassanio and there are interesting performances by Anthony Nicholls as a saturnine Antonio, and Malcolm Reid as a pipe-smoking Lorenzo in a white suit.

Julia Trevelyn Oman's ingenious single set, with two pavilions opening to reveal either an opulent, golden Belmont, or Shylcok's house, makes beautiful pictures.

Musical arrangements, including excerpts from Verdi's Rigoletto, also contribute effectively to the mood of a production which must rank as another of the National Theatre's notable achievements.

ARE YOU 18-21?
Do you want to meet more people your own age? Victoria is, unfortunately, a very cliquish city. If you don't know someone, you can't get anywhere. Our group is trying to change that. We're not a business or a church organization, but a group of interested young people who've decided to do something about the lack of a common meeting point in this city. We believe that what most singles, 18-21, are looking for is a group where they can meet others their own age. That's what we are. We're not a dating service; no one is trying to make money; we're simply young people who would like to meet others and hope that others would like to do the same. If you're interested, phone 388-7229. You won't be sorry.

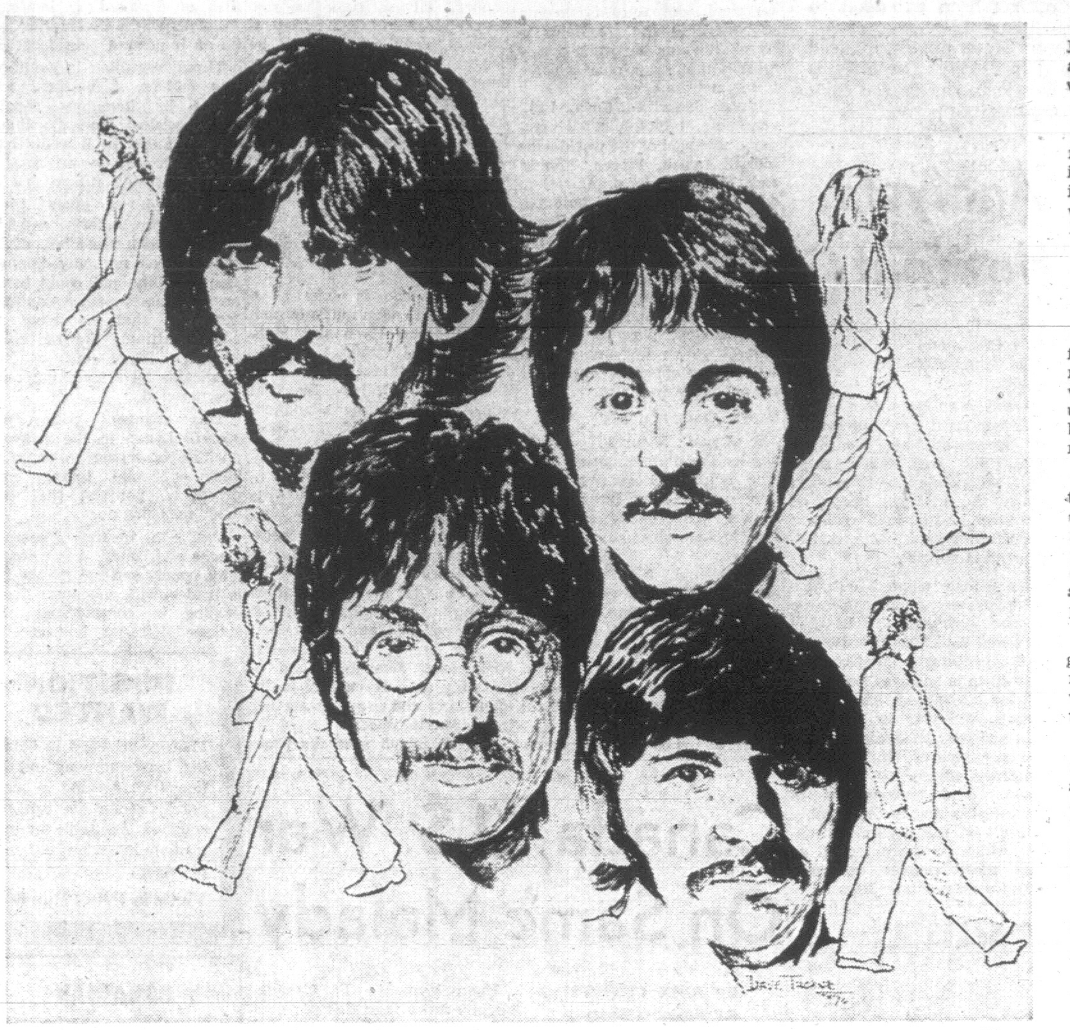
A Magic That Sprang From Genius

By WILLIAM WOODS

When people want to recreate the mood of the 60s," Aaron Copland once said, "They will play Beatles music."

The dating is as accurate as the prophecy. What began in 1960 in Liverpool ended in 1970 in London with Paul McCartney's announcement that he is packing it in.

After ten years of tight creative collaboration, no member of the group is dispensible. But no loss could be more crippling to the Beatles than that of the man whose taste in melody and flawless gift for song lifted the Beatles from the yeah-yeah-yeah of the Merseyside to the great-god-almighty of a new era of pop music culture.



Have Records

It is not, of course, really over — any more than Schubert is "over." We still have their records — and those have been all that we have had for several years.

And we still have the men themselves, but no longer busy together at their music: John is waging peace, George is producing an album of oldies for Ringo, and Paul has backed up his declaration of independence with a solo LP that bears his name and features only his tunes and playing.

So they are all a long way from being consigned to the musical histories they single-handedly wrote. But the Beatles — as Beatles — are through.

Tears on Pillows

Five years ago, that would have been nothing more than an occasion for tears on the pillows of the countless thousands of children who went paralytic under their gaze from Royal Albert Hall to Shea Stadium and bought perhaps 300 million of their records. Teenage London society queens would have launched charmless rituals of mourning, mods and rockers would have forgotten their class and their classification. Over here, kids with enough taste remaining to prefer the real article to the mock Monkees would have sent Stones sales sailing to ease their woe.

But the rest of us would probably have gotten along comfortably enough. Those who cared deeply about popular music would have been conscious that a good group had gone under — that four British musicians had restored the roots of rock to the country of its origin and folded.

It would have been a note in Billboard, a goldie-oldie heard again at a party you were just a bit too old to go to.

But five years later, it hasn't happened that way. Instead, we are up against a literally incalculable loss. Which also means that we are left with an unmeasurable gift — the gift of what John Lennon, Paul McCartney, Ringo Starr, and George Harrison did with popular music from 1960 to the last dying chord of "Let It Be."

During that time, the enormous approbation remained. But its ground unquestionably shifted, some of the kids grew up with the music; others were lost in the wake. New fans picked up along the way included Leonard Bernstein, you, and me.

Various historical movements are credited with the change in popular music wrought by the Beatles. One critic finds astonishing harmonic complexity in a song as old as "She Loves You." Others note the sinister intrusion of sitar into "Norwegian Wood."

There is almost universal accord that the promise of "Rubber Soul" is fulfilled by a few shots from "Revolver."

And then we come — but by a leap, not a progression — to the staggering improbable majesty of "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Heart's Club Band." It was of that work that the contemporary composer Ned Rorem wrote:

"The Beatles' superiority, of course, is finally as elusive as Mozart's to Clementi; both spoke skillfully the same tonal language, but only Mozart spoke it with the added magic of genius. Who will define such magic?"

Perhaps the Beatles themselves could have, had they not been kept busy creating it. Perhaps it lies at the invisible point where Lennon's wise lyrics are cloaked in McCartney's skillful lines.

Value of Vision

In any case, it is a magic that springs beyond all doubt from genius; a magic founded not in the false idolatry they wore so lightly, but in the unquestionable art they brought before the world as ranbow, geyser, cutting edge.

I doubt it would be possible to uncover the alchemy that turned a first-rate rock band into supreme masters of programmatic music of our day. And I don't really think such an exploration is important.

All that matters is the grace has been granted, and no grace should be more valued in a secular society than that of vision.

Because — if, finally, the mood of an obituary calls for some central reassessment and assigning of value — vision was the Beatles' finest gift. I suspect that Copland, in his remark meant only that the Beatles' tunes are the best reflection of the surface glitter, the party-plastic of the decade just now sunk beyond the rim of time. But the ultimate felicity of his judgment goes far beyond that.

Profound Despair

I think it goes far enough to encompass the realization that the Beatles' music sketches a nearly adequate existential history of their time — not only the reckless exuberance of youthful dance, but the resonant, profound despair of much of our circumstances.

And though they may be parted
There is still a chance that they will see
There will be an answer:
Let it be.

Space Drama Gripping Film

By PETER McNELLY

Marooned, which opened Thursday night at the Odeon theatre, is a solid suspense drama about three United States astronauts doomed to die in orbit around the earth unless they can be rescued before their oxygen runs out.

It's a great movie for the whole family, and almost never dull.

The tecnical effects are realistic and up-to-date. The computers look like real computers. Mission control talks to the spacecraft in the magic blend of numbers and English which millions of us now associate with manned space flights.

The launching pad effectively recreates the image of Florida's cape Kennedy, and the plot clips along, hiking the steady-building tension with each unforseen difficulty and each twist of fate.

Despite the technical effects, Marooned is a human drama. The recent crippled flight of Apollo 13 proves that the space melodrama of the movie is right on top of real life.

Sooner or later, some astronauts will get stuck in orbit, just like the three in Marooned.

Gregory Peck and David Janssen look weak against the lesser known actors, and I think this is because they don't fit in an outer space drama. Each is too big on the screen to be subordinated to technical devices.

★ ★ ★

Astronauts Richard Crenna, James Franciscus and Gene Hackman, who played the brother in Bonnie and Clyde, develop a warm mix of character, especially when they begin to let themselves go as they come to believe they're not going to get back.

Franciscus is particularly good as a gentle scientist on the mission, keeping his cool but nearly breaking into tears as he talks to his wife for what appears to be the last time.

The goodbye scenes with the wives are better written than most of the film. Since two of the gals look like Nancy Sinatra stand-ins, you might expect the dialogue to be terrible, but it's not.

Each wife has been briefed to talk only about trivia so their husbands will not get excited and waste their failing oxygen by breathing faster. But when they face the images of their men on TV, its the men who break down and excite the wives.

A Russian spacecraft gets into the rescue act, but the plug for international co-operation in space is so obvious that it's harmless. Director John Sturges has the good sense not to belabor the point.

On three occasions, the astronauts use or talk about using drugs. Not marijuana and LSD, but sleeping pills and tranquillizers. Somehow, the drugs fit the technical environment of manned space flight.

There is nothing unusual in mission control's instruction to administer an injection to one of the astronauts who was becoming dangerously upset.

Of course, Marooned isn't at all about drugs. But the chemistry's there, right with the tracking stations, weather reports, computer print-outs, liquid oxygen and international politics which flesh out the details in these modern westerns — the space operas.

Every 10 Years 'Piety' Transforms a Town

By GEOFFREY MOORHOUSE

On Monday the decade of waiting will be over here, in this perplexing little town beset by Alps, and for the 36th time Oberammergau will begin the long summer performance of its Passion Play. There is nothing like this particular production of the Christ story anywhere else.

It is the fulfilment of a vow made until the world's end by forefathers who believed that God had delivered them from a plague which swept across Europe behind a Swedish army in 1634.

●

It has its own parochial rules and regulations and they are Teutonically stringent. It represents at least nine months of very hard work by a kind of peasant people who become, every tenth year, glorified and transformed with an international acting reputation.

It is one of the really massive tourist attractions; by May last year 436,800 applications had already been lodged for 291,200 available seats.

No one can take part in this play unless he was born in Oberammergau or at least unless he has lived there for 20 years.

It is a matter of importance to be selected when the auditions are held, and hearts have been broken for a week on failing this test; a girl who had hoped to be the Virgin Mary in 1960 burst into tears because she had postponed her wedding in order to qualify and then lost the fiance who rated marriage higher than either art or piety.

Selection, moreover, is sometimes a matter of devious village politics involving much more than the historionic capacities of 1,700 amateur actors. It is said that Hans Schwaighofer was cast as Judas last time because he was one of the few men who kept himself completely apart from the Nazis in the days when the wearing of brown and black shirts was a mark of local respectability.

These are not unsophisticated people and anyone who thinks that is very simple indeed. Oberammergau of "the whole Jewish people," preserves various vital balances more deftly than most places in Creation.

It has a farmhouse, complete with cattle sleeping beneath the family bedrooms and muckheap steaming fragantly outside the back door, slap bang in the middle of the town. A hundred yards away it has a computer to process all those theatre applications.

Every other shop is crammed with very gorgeous pieces of wood carving and the price lists are keenly aware of the uppermost limits of the market; in 1960 the visitors spent £3 millions in Oberammergau.

There is nothing more rubicund than the sight of Martin Wagner, this year's Judas, brawny and bearded, carefully chiselling another Virgin and Child in his hillside house; but the transistor at his elbow is playing pop music from Munich while he works.

Obergammergau has had its troubles with the Passion Play. Post-war sensitivity has produced periodic criticisms of its text, which a German television program some years ago described as "primitive, bigoted, and anti-semitic." A village committee, assisted by a Benedictine monk from the abbey of Ettal, made some revisions for the 1970 production but the monk is not happy with them. The play has been shortened by 60 minutes, presumably at the request of international tour operators, whose clients have been restive towards the end of eight hours solid Passion. There has been little dilution of some dodgy lines. Pilate will now crucify Christ "according to the will of the people of Jeruslaem" instead

But the monk shakes his head sadly at the thought of what has been left untouched. The people of Oberammergau, he says, are very conservative.

They are apt to laugh at hostility and say we wouldn't know how to be anti-semitic when no Jew has ever lived among us. Which is true. Almost every one of the 4,800 souls in Oberammergau is Catholic.

A very proud people, too. When the mark crashed and laid them on their beam ends in the twenties an American offered a vast sum if they would let him film the play. Oberammergau refused with dignity. It never renamed a single street after the Nazi leadership, either, though it might have been tactful to do so.

The man who dominates its life at present is not the Burgomeister, but Herr Preisinger. He was Anton when he was playing Christ in 1950 and 1960 but he is Topi as mine host of the Alte Post Hotel, as the director of the 1970 production, and as the enormously confident figure striding round town with a large Alsation on a lead.

●

He first appeared on stage in 1922, as a boy in the crowd scenes. When he played Christ a German newspaper published a cartoon, picturing Pilate, Christ, and the front row of the audience.

Pilate is saying, "I wash my hands of this man, for I find no fault in him." Someone on the front row is replying, "No fault? Joined the Nazi party in 1932, stormtrooper from 1933 . . ."

Herr Preisinger has a job which might floor any other three men and which is not eased by the fact that even the official press officer, Herr Bauer, seems unable to make a move without first referring the matter to him.

Herr Preisinger has been in the Passion Theatre almost every night since the turn of the year, rehearsing his colossal cast in the platoons and battalions. He has them filing in and signing a book before they start, and when one man forgets, Herr Preisiinger points an outstresthed singer points an outstretched arm towards the back of the queue and utters a very sharp word of command.

He has them so well drilled in the traditions of Oberammergau that one evening the Virgin Mary herself, an apple-cheeked milkmaid of a lass, rushes straight up to Frank Martin (without first signing in) and says "You can take pictures before we start but it is absolutely forbidden to be here while we rehearse; do you understand?" They don't stand so far upstage at the London Palladium.

But at the London Palladium they don't have to wait 10 years for their big season. They don't have such a stake in having things exactly as they want them; in 1960 Obermmergau built herself a kindergarten and a fire station from the play profits and this year it is thinking of a new and larger theatre.

At the London Palladium they don't have Global tours bringing foreigners round in the depths of winter merely to see old ladies stitching props through a glass window. They don't have anything which captures the imagination as much as this one rare drama played out in a remote corner of Central Europe.

The perplexing thing about it is that, backstage and beforehand, you cannot be sure how much of it is piety.

Rise Temporary Experts Figure

By ART JOHNSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

The bear market on Canadian stock exchanges this week may have been forced into hibernation— at least temporarily — by a sharp technical rally.

But how long the hibernation will last is a matter of speculation among observers.

Most analysts agree that a sharp advance which began Friday is temporary because the same factors which caused the plunge still prevail.

Some observers said Friday's advance was merely a long-overdue adjustment of eroded prices. The more optimistic predict an uptrend lasting perhaps a week.

They said the rally came when a substantial number of investors felt markets had bottomed out and will not move down further.

The pessimists point out that disappointing quarterly corporate earnings, the federal government's tight-money policies and political tensions in the Middle East, Vietnam and Cambodia still bear down on investors.

Further Extension Of Power Corp. Offer

MONTREAL (CP) — Power Corp. announced Friday its offer to acquire a majority interest in Consolidated-Bathurst Co. has been extended to June 2.

The offer, made March 31, originally expired April 28 but was extended to Friday. The offer is an exchange of 2½ Power Corp. shares for each share of the giant pulp and paper company.

Wall St. Analysts Remain Hesitant

NEW YORK (WP) — The stock market bolted to its biggest one-day gain in two years Friday in a continuation of the rebound that began late Thursday afternoon.

Investment-grade stocks led the upsurge, sending the blue-chip Dow Jones industrial average, the market's bellwether indicator, to a gain of 17.43 points and a close at 702.22. It was the biggest one-day jump in the Dow since April 8, 1968, when the opening moves in the Paris peace talks propelled the average to a 18.61-point rise.

Although delighted by the upturn, Wall Street observers were reluctant to predict the end of the selling that has gripped the market for the past 18 months and picked up in momentum over the past four weeks.

Security analysts pointed out that the broad range of stocks, as measured by the Dow industrials, had fallen more than 46 points in five days before the upswing began on Thursday. After such constant selling, they said, some kind of rebound is normal.

They also pointed out that there has been no change in the gloomy psychology that has pervaded Wall Street as a result of the continuing inflation, the slow-down in business, poor first-quarter corporate earnings reports, the war in Southeast Asia and the upheavals in cities and on campuses. On Thursday, a former adviser to President Nixon told businessmen in Philadelphia that he is "frankly scared" of the conomic situation, which he characterized as "the most critical economic period we have ever been in."

Investment Firm in Commodities Field

By AB KENT

One of Canada's most conservative and respectable investment companies is turning to barnyards and cornfields in its search for investor opportunities that grow more elusive in the stock market.

Royal Securities Corp. Ltd., venerable Halifax-founded company now part of the world-wide Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith Inc. organization, will shortly form a Canadian division of its well established U.S. commmodities trading section.

Part of the reason is the rather uninspiring state of the equities and bond markets in this country, plus the feeling that Canadian investors represent an untapped potential for commodities trading.

SAME ADJUSTMENT

A Royal Securities source admits the diversification from blue chips and quality bonds into commodities futures will require some adjustment both for broker-salesmen and investors.

But orientation of local managers and salesmen within Royal Securites has begun. In addition, some trading in commodities has been done through the Canadian branches of Merrill Lynch that were established before the takeover of Royal Securities a year ago.

Anything from cotton to copper, citrus fruits to soybeans, hides to hogs, barley to broilers, eggs to zinc, can be bought and sold in contracts handled on such North American markets as Winnipeg Grain Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade, Commodity Exchange Inc., N.Y., New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, Chicago Mercantile Exchange, Dallas Cotton and Commodity Exchange, Fort Worth Grain Exchange and the Memphis Board of Trade.

Trading also is done at a number of London markets such as the Metal Exchange, Fishmeal Terminal Market Association, Wool Terminal Market Association, United Terminal Sugar Market Association, and at the Midlands' Liverpool Cotton Association Ltd.

MARKET SOMEWHERE

Generally speaking, if there is a commodity for human consumption or for factory processing, there is a market for it somewhere.

In Canada the commodities trading business historically has been developed and maintained by one dealer, Winnipeg-based Richardson Securities, and is probably an outgrowth of cattle auctioning and grain marketing in the Manitoba city.

Merrill Lynch sees the prospect not only of well-fixed individual investors participating in commodites trading, but also of drawing industrial accounts where inventories may be an important consideration.

Through trading in commodities futures, a business may hedge its inventory requirements against market setbacks without the risks it would have to face through overstocking or second-guessing future prices.

Emphasis is given to a prospective trader's worth. Merrill Lynch must be satisfied that he has not only financial responsibility and could handle possible losses with equanimity, but also that he have the correct attitude toward futures trading. Three out of four applicants for a trading account are rejected.

This stringent policy puts Merrill Lynch in the awkward position of trying to drum up business while telling some prospects, politely, that they don't measure up.

Unlike the trading of common stocks and bonds, it is acknowledge openly and beforehand that a trader will encounter losses dealing in commodities. The successful trader, however, follows a set of rules that enable him to cut his losses and let his gains ride, so that he may have numerically more losses than gains but still come out ahead.

To the uninitiated, that will sound strange right off the bat, but still make good sense. The novice also may find it odd to put up at least $1,000 before he even starts trading, since trades are done on margin.

Canada, U.S. War On Same Malady

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Canada, too, is having its problems with inflation, which suggests that the persistence of this malady in the United States economy may not be solely the result of an improper approach to the problem.

Canada, however, is attacking the problem a bit more directly. Unlike the United States, where the defeat of inflation is expected to be a natural result of an economic slowdown, Canada is considering direct credit controls.

Moreover, the Canadian government already has developed a program of voluntary restraints on prices and wages that has met with some success during the last few months, although the exact amount cannot be measured.

Consumer price increases: In Canada, nearly five per cent; in the United States close to six per cent.

Unemployment: In Canada, slightly more than five per cent on an annual basis; in the United States, 4.8 per cent in April and rising swiftly.

CANADA PICKING UP

Industrial output: In Canada, continuing at a slow pace but showing signs of perking up; in the United States, at a standstill or even falling back some.

Budget: Canada's is in surplus, meaning that the government is restricting economic activity. The U.S. budget also calls for a surplus, but many doubts are arising about the feasibility of this in either the fiscal year of 1970 or 1971.

Perhaps the biggest difference is in the interpretation of economists. Many economists believe the U.S. is in the midst of a mild recession, based on declines in production. Canada's economy is still expanding.

The two economies are suffering from such similar problems, however, that the approach to the future in one country may have lessons for the other.

In Canada, the government is considering measures that would restrain the economy even more. Higher taxes are an outside possibility for later this year if prices and wages continue to rise.

That possibility becomes less remote when the wage situation is reviewed. New wage contracts have averaged nine per cent higher this year, threatening to put inflationary pressures beneath prices. Contract negotiations involve twice as many workers this year as last.

The biggest difference between the U.S. and Canadian approaches is in the attitude toward credit. The government of Prime Minister Trudeau has proposed consumer credit controls and legislation is planned for June.

SUBJECT AVOIDED

In the U.S., the Nixon administration has carefully avoided the subject of credit restraints or voluntary limitations on prices and wages. It hopes instead to reduce inflation through a restrictive Federal Reserve policy, by limitations on government spending and by taxation.

The Nixon policy has slowed economic expansion, but the slowdown has produced little effect on rising retail prices.

With the economy facing enormous pressures for additional spending, and with consumers said to be ready to spend again, some economists speculate that it may not be long before the Nixon administration reaches some of the same conclusions as the Trudeau government.

White Pass Orders Air Survey

An aerial survey for a White Pass and Yukon route rail extension north from Whitehorse to the general area of Carmacks, in the Yukon, has started.

When making the announcement, A. P. Friesen, president of the White Pass, emphasized that the current survey does not mean that construction of a rail extension is due to start at this time.

"The present survey is part of a continuing program of basic engineering and feasibility studies which we started five years ago," he said. "The results of this aerial survey will broaden, update and upgrade the information we have been gathering since 1965."

The survey is the first phase of a comprehensive four-phase program. Phase One will consist of air reconnaissance, aerial photography and map and photo study.

"No decision has been made at this time regarding the timetable for the remaining three phases," Friesen said.

The White Pass recently completed a $22 million expansion and upgrading program which included a second container ship, a complete deep-sea port facility at Skagway, Alaska to handle Yukon mine concentrates, larger locomotives and rolling stock, a new truck fleet, and a specially designed "tear drop" container to handle Yukon's concentrates.

The company has been a world leader in integrated ship-train-truck container operations since 1955 when it launched its first container vessel.

Demand High For Exploration Rights in Arctic

OTTAWA (CP) — Mineral exploration rights covering 8,700,000 acres in the Northwest Territories have been granted so far this year, the northern development department has announced.

The announcement said the heavy demand for permits, coupled with a large number of permits granted in 1969, reflects new interest by mining and oil companies in a hunt for resources in the Melville Peninsula, Keewatin and Arctic islands regions.

Base metals and uranium are being particularly sought, the department said.

Permits are effective April 1 and valid for three years.

A minimum of $870,000 will be spent on exploration activities under the first year of recently-issued permits, the department said.

Bond Average Gains Fraction

The 40-bond average yield compiled by McLeod, Young, Weir and Co. Ltd. rose a fraction during April despite a recent trend to higher prices and lower yields.

The company said the average yield at April 30 was 9.36 per cent, up from 9.35 per cent at the end of March and 1.05 per cent from April 30, 1969.

Canadian and industrial groups rose .01 and .07 per cent respectively, while provincial and municipal groups fell .02 and .02 per cent.

Trade Surplus Soars Over Three Months

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's trade surplus soared to $655,000,000 in the first quarter of 1970, the highest seasonally adjusted surplus on record, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported Friday.

The international payments current account moved from a deficit of $114,000,000 in the last quarter of 1969 to a $218,000,000 surplus the first three months of this year. In the same quarter last year the balance showed a deficit of $140,000,000.

The new high in the trade surplus was reached as exports rose eight per cent while imports fell two per cent.

But a nine-per-cent increase in receipts on non-merchandise transactions was more than offset by a 20-per-cent rise in payments mainly on interest and dividends to foreign investors.

Unadjasted for seasonal factors, the international current account shows a surplus of $34,000,000 for the first quarter. This was the net result of the unusual trade surplus and a deficit of non-merchandise transactions.

Seasonally-adjusted exports in the first quarter totalled $41,219,000,000. Inports totalled $3,564,000,000.

Non-merchandise receipts amounted to $1,116,000,000. Payments of $1,553,000,000 led to a deficit of $437,000,000. Travel, interest and dividend payments make up about 80 per cent of these non-merchandise outlays.

The over-all current account surplus of $218,000,000 for the quarter resulted from receipts of $5,335,000,000 and payments of $5,117,000,000.

Direction of West Union Linked to Final Tax Plan

"In the years ahead . . . the Lethbridge conference . . . will be looked back upon as an historic event, and as something of a turning point, for the west, and for Canada."

After this opening prophecy in his keynote address on the subject "One Prairie Province?", Federal Minister of Supply James Richardson proceeded to endorse the concept of amalgamating Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta into one province to be called Canada West.

The scene was the conference on western union sponsored jointly by the University of Lethbridge and the Lethbridge Herald. The movement toward western union has already begun and the fact that a cabinet minister from the west has despaired of the prospects for the west in confederation as presently structured or as it is likely to be re-structured by current negotiations, is higly significant.

Canadians from all regions would do well to follow closely these events in western Canada. The federal government might profit from its first hand knowledge of the western mood. We will gain some insight into that probability when Ottawa declares itself on the final shape of its tax reform package. If the west is united in anything, it is in its opposition to the philosophy and many of the specifics of the present white paper plan.

MOST MODERATE

Sunday's speech by Richardson wasn't his first on the subject, even though it was his most moderate.

The substantial success of the Parti Quebecois in capturing nearly one-quarter of the popular vote in Quebec has breathed new enthusiasm into the desire of many western leaders to unite the west. As they see it, the spectacular success of Rene Levesque and the four-year opportunity given the rest of Canada to convince Quebec of the viability of confederation means that everything is now up for grabs. Nothing is non-negotiable.

There is considerable support on the prairies for the view that unless a western power bloc is assembled quickly, the new Canada will be negotiated between Quebec, Ontario and Ottawa and the final solution imposed on the west, the north and the Maritimes.

LAST STEP

Many who support the Richardson thesis believe that even with western union, the west's aspirations for the economic reorganization of Canada may be pondered to, even fed carrots, but in the main, ignored. They regard western union as a last step in an attempt to carve out an equitable redistribution of economic power, and that failing, a first step in the establishment of a new state.

The west's disenchantment is based on both economic and philosophical grounds. The concentration of economic power in central Canada, the lack of a regional banking system, the disadvantage to western consumers created by protective tariffs on imported goods, the lack of a national freight rate policy which permits western goods to compete in eastern markets and the lack of a Federal regional development policy which meaningfully causes a de-centralization and equitable distribution of economic opportunity are the classical elements of western discontent.

The lingering wheat crisis, and the lack of aggressive policies for development and export of western oil are more recent sources of aggravation. The white paper on tax reform has drawn nearly universal criticism from western leaders because it has synthesized most western grievances.

Reduction of private capital, of which the west is woefully short; reduction of the rewards for risk-taking, considered essential for western economic development; the demise or forced merger of small business, the economic and social cornerstone of western communities; the further concentration of corporate power in the hands of eastern head offices, a guarantee that the west will remain a branch office economy; the withdrawal of capital from resource industries, the frontier-busters of western and northern Canada; the further erosion of the right to pass one's savings to one's children, a highly-prized western social value; acceleration of the establishment of a government controlled Galbraithian economy, anathema to the entrepreneurial wesertn spirit; are some of the result of the white paper's implementation predicted by western provincial premiers.

Western discontent is a reality. It must run its course, but the direction it takes and whether it becomes a positve or negative factor in the constitutional arena, will be very much influenced by the final form of the federal government's tax reform plan.

Ford Turns Down Soviet Proposal

DETROIT (UPI) — Ford Motor Co. has turned down the Soviet Union's request to help build the world's largest truck factory in Russia, Henry Ford II, board chairman, said Thursday.

Ford's announcement at the annual stockholders meeting came two days after Defence Secretary Melvin Laird told a meeting of the Detroit Economic Club he was opposed to "exporting American Technology to the Soviet Union while they are sending trucks to North Vietnam."

However, Ford added that his company still is considering exchanging "nonstrategic technical information" with the Soviets as they had requested.

Ford also announced what had been an ill-kept secret — that his company had been working on a minicar and would put it on the market in September. The car is named the Pinto. It will be the smallest American-built car on the market, he said.

Ford made an 11-day visit to the Soviet Union in April and announced at the end of it that he was considering a proposal to build a truck factory on the Kama River in eastern Russia which would produce 150,000 vehicles annually.

"With regard to our participation in a commercial vehicle program, I have advised the Soviet government that it is not feasible for us to give further consideration to their proposal," Ford told the stockholders.

Bond Prices Score Fractional Gain

TORONTO (CP) — Prices on the Canadian bond market were fractionally higher in moderate trading this week.

The change in the discount rate, which most investors were expecting, was announced Monday. The rate decrease caused a small mid-week rally which carried through until the end of the week.

Dealers said that investor indecision is still the major factor holding prices back.

They also noted that if the interest rate was dropped there were plenty of borrowers ready to come into the market, which would result in a rapid build-up of the calendar.

The Government of Canada Thursday introduced two issues of treasury bills totalling $125,000,000 each.

The first group, 273-day bills, will yield an average of 6.61 per cent. The 364-day bills will yield an average of 6.6 per cent.

Day-to-day money ranged on the week from 6¼ to 6⅞ per cent, closing at 6¼ per cent Friday.

Three- and six-month treasury bills traded Friday at 6.49 and 6.52 per cent, respectively, a low for the week.

Semester System Finds Favor With Both Teachers, Students

Semesters were introduced at two city high schools last fall, and a survey of teachers and students there shows most of them prefer the new system over the traditional system.

The Greater Victoria school board's research and testing division produced a 90-page evaluation of semesters at Mount View and Oak Bay senior. It was presented Monday at a meeting of the board's education committee.

In answer to the question "Which system of school organization do you prefer?" 68.5 per cent of the students said they prefer semesters, 13.9 per cent preferred the traditional system, 12.2 per cent had no preference and 5.4 per cent had no opinion.

Teachers were more hesitant in endorsing semesters. Answering the same question, their responses ran 52.5 per cent for semesters, and 28.8 for the traditional system.

* * *

The system allows students to complete three or four courses in the four-month period from September to December and another three or four between January and June.

Teachers and students agreed the pace and intensity of instruction was greatly increased with the semesters.

One advantage is that Grade 12 students who failed courses during a previous year can complete them within four months instead of the usual 10.

Most of the report was devoted to comments by students and teachers, and a wide range of opinions was presented.

For example, some students said they had so much homework they could barely keep up and had to curtail non-school activities. Others said they had less homework than ever.

For some students classes are more lively than on the old system, but several said the intensity of the work made course content more unpalatable than before.

* * *

One teacher wrote:

"If the objectives of our educational system is to get more students through the schools with better marks, the semester system might do this. If the objective is an 'educated' individual, I'm dubious about the result."

Another teacher said: "I question that the semester system is desirable except in the subjects which are essentially content subjects. Subjects in which development of perception, attitudes and skills are basic probably suffer under the semester system."

Here are a few interesting student comments:

"At heart I'm a stout conservative, but I'm not blind to a good change. And this semester system is a good thing."

* * *

"The concentration of course content . . . is good. It is easier to temporarily regurgitate the irrelevant garbage we are fed, and far easier to immediately fc it after we have passed the course."

"What are yiu trying to do to the students? School is becoming a factory and what you call education is a farce."

"I strongly detest the way in which many of the students smart-talk to their teachers. In the classroom the students should be disciplined so well as to know who is the boss in a classroom."

"My interest in school subjects has next to nothing to do with the semester system."

"Some subjects are pointless in the way they are taught. French, for example. Half the people who pass still can't speak a word of the language."

"Present curriculums don't even deserve an attitude. You've ruined school by making it a funnel and sieve for university."

The question is put by Dr. Fritz Redl, a professor of behavioral sciences at Wayne State University in Detroit who will be guest speaker at the annual meeting of the Family and Children's Service May 28.

There will be a brief business meeting and new officers will be elected before his address at 8 p.m. in the Newcombe Auditorium.

BOB DUCKS DOC'S ORDER

SCUNTHORPE, ENGLAND (UPI) — Despite doctor's orders to cut down on eating, 252-pound Bob Cousins says he'll accept a duck farm's challenge to try to eat a six-pound duck and four pounds of trimmings. "I just can't resist," Cousins said.

TARGET PRACTICE

Sea Lions Shot

Two years ago a large herd of sea lions lay basking in the winter sun on a flat rock near Pachena Point.

Suddenly repeated rifle shots were heard from the shore and a spectator watching the scene from a vantage point on a nearby cliff saw several sea lions roll into the sea.

* * *

One mammal was so confused that it scrambled into the bush ashore. It was pursued and shot.

The dead animals were left to rot on the shore.

This sort of indiscriminate shooting — using sea lions as targets — may soon come to an end in British Columbia.

It has been going on for years, but a proposed regulation now under study by the Federal Fisheries department may put a stop to it.

The regulation would require a permit to shoot sea lions in B.C. waters. Fishermen would be exempted if the mammals were endangering their nets.

* * *

Maurice Houghton, chief federal fisheries conservation protection officer, said regulations banning the killing or capture of killer whales and elephant seals, have also been proposed.

However, he added, the proposed regulation would allow the capture of killer whales for scientific purposes or zoos — subject to the approval of the department.

Earlier this week, the Oregon Fish Commission banned the shooting of sea lions off the state's coast and in bays and estuaries.

The OFC staff said sea lions were not a threat to salmon runs.

Jeffrey Gottfried, curator of the Portland Zoo, agreed, saying sea lions prey on rock fish and lampreys which are salmon predators.

Houghton said there was also a possibility that sea lions would be granted full protection in certain areas where they were a public attraction.

* * *

"We are looking into the matter of granting full protection to the rookery near Pachena Point," he said.

"We have to keep some controls on sea lions because we have so many — about 8,000," he added. "But shooting them just for targets should be stopped."

He said the elephant seal — a large mammal with a long inflatable snout, was another matter. There were only small herds of these animals left, and these were mostly confined to southern waters.

Occasionally, however, they were seen in B.C. waters. Mexico had granted them full protection.

But I'm paying for the ring. And I'm buying it at Birks."

"I wouldn't know the Hope Diamond from the Crown Jewels of Denmark. But I do know this: we're going to get the best and most beautiful ring in the world for the money I have to spend.

That's why I'm going to Birks. They have a bigger selection of rings now — including some less expensive diamonds. Right now this appeals to me. In a few years we can exchange the stone for a larger one. And at Birks I know I'll be getting true value for my money.

But no bargains or so-called wholesale deals for me. Too many of my friends have gone for these and found out later that the diamond they bought wasn't worth the price. You can trust Birks."

IT'S TRADITIONAL HOLIDAY FUN

Get Out in Garden for Long Weekend

By JACK BEASTALL

The holiday weekend in May is usually spent "planting the garden" and many gardens are overplanted to a point of being a source of trouble for the rest of the season.

It is a wise gardener who figures the quantities of vegetables the family can consume and sows accordingly.

Also wise is the gardener who looks ahead to picnics, fishing, vacations and other events, all of which mean time out from gardening.

Should the weather be considerably warmer than at the time of writing, sweet corn, beets, white summer turnips and beans can be sown this weekend.

Sweet corn is an interesting plant as well as being delectable and therefore popular. Unlike our other vegetables it is a strong growing annual grass plant having an unusual arrangement of flowers.

The male flowers which supply the pollen are located at the top of the stalks, while the female flowers that produce the seeds or kernes are the part we call tassels or silks in the axils of the leaves.

Each strand of silk is attached an embryo that will develop into a kernel if the silk is properly pollinated.

Pollination is a hit and miss procedure, the fine pollen must be spread by air currents. Stong winds will blow the pollen all over the garden, while light breezes loosen it in a cloud and permit it to drift down on to the tassels.

The best pollination, therefore the fullest cobs, is obtained when corn is planted in blocks of several rows so that the pollen scatters over the entire planting. When planted in a singluar row results are not so good.

Once the male flowers open and the pollen is ripening, overhead watering or rainy weather can spoil the pollen or leave water on the silks so that the pollen cannot adhere. The result is a poor crop.

Most of us think of corn as a crop growing six to ten feet high, but the newer hybrids are less than three feet and bear quantities of cobs low down on the plants with 10 to 12 rows of kernels and excellent flavor.

Other jobs needing attention this weekend are spring flowering shrubs and bulbs, watering the lawn and plants near foundations, checking for tent caterpillars, and feeding the asparagus bed.

Any spring flowering shrub on which the flowers are now fading can be cut back one-half the length of each shoot that has flowered.

Forsythias and spiraeas can have the oldest wood removed entirely at soil level. This reduces the size tremendously and is best done before shortening the flowered shoots.

Tips for Home Gardeners

The spring flowering bulbs (daffs., tulips, and hyacinths) have made their display for this season and must now build up their reserves for next spring.

The first job is to remove the faded flowers and the seed pod. Next, scatter a bulb or potato fertilizer over the soil (not on the foliage) around the plants, then follow with a good watering to dissolve the fertilizer and carry it down to the roots. It is no use to a plant left as a powder on top of the soil.

Keep the tops green as long as possible; water as needed. Do not cut off the foliage, nor tie it in knots until it shows signs of deterioration.

Most gardeners fail to water their lawns early enough to keep them growing and green. Once the grass shows brown the damage has been done.

From the beginning of April to the end of September lawns in this area need one inch of water every 10 days. If you haven't watered yet, start now. Don't sprinkle, soak thoroughly.

Only those called upon to diagnose garden troubles realize the number of plants in foundation plantings that are slowly dying due to the light winter rainfall.

Plants close to foundations and under overhanging eaves are in need of water throughout the year, and those not watered during the winter are showing the effects as daytime temperatures increase.

Tent caterpillar webs were reported in some districts as early as February and March. Check all trees and shrubs this weekend, cut off the tents and drop them into the incinerator when the fire is hot.

If the caterpillars have left the web be sure not to kill those with a white egg on the forehead. This is the egg of the predator and to survive it will devour the caterpillar. The more predators and less caterpillars to turn into egg laying moths, the better for the gardener.

Asparagus is cut over a period determined by the height the plants grew the previous season. The rule is one week of cutting for every foot of growth. Cutting too long weakens the plants for the following year.

After cutting is finished, dress the bed with a complete general fertilizer (5-10-5, 6-8-6) and water well to carry the food down to the roots. A dressing of manure or compost is applied after the bed is cleaned up in the fall.

WEEK'S WORK

Early blooms such as Cytisus praecox and C. kewensis should be pruned hard while young to increase their size. Cut back all growths which bloomed just as soon as most have faded. Older plants which are well shaped, need only light pruning now.

Viburnums such as V. carlesii, V. juddii, V. carlcephalum and similar early ones now past their best, need only the old heads removed. But any unwanted growth may also be removed now.

Prunus triloba, the bushy double flowering plum, needs all the flowered shoots cut. Then give a little lime and a good mulch of old compost or manure.

The winter and early spring heathers can be clipped over to remove old blooms. New growth will start at once.

Give pinks, carnations and all dianthuses a side dressing of wood ashes.

Poinsettias which have had a partial rest can be cut back to a few inches or to just above strong shoots. Repot, water well. New shoots which follow are either taken as cuttings to form new plants or left to rejuvenate the old. Put into warm place outdoors in June, and keep well watered all summer.

Grapevines in greenhouse will produce perfect bunches if the grapes in the bunches are thinned carefully. One bunch to each lateral is enough for young vines.

Sow sweet corn, using a dwarf variety for July cobbing. Sow also beets, white turnips, kohl-rabi, crinkled peas, beans.

MAYOR DALEY EXPLAINS PROBLEM

CHICAGO (UPI) — Mayor Richard J. Daley was asked to comment on the current teamsters union dispute with the trucking industry.

Daley noted that the union is on a selective strike in the Chicago area while the industry has locked out drivers. "What keeps people apart is their inability to get together," he said.

LIKE FATHER . . . LIKE SON

READING, Pa. (UPI) — A father and son, walking one block apart, were struck by cars when they stepped into the street at the same time.

Carl Waldman, 33, and his son, Michael, 11, were taken to Reading General Hospital where each learned of the other's accident.

Both were treated for minor injuries.

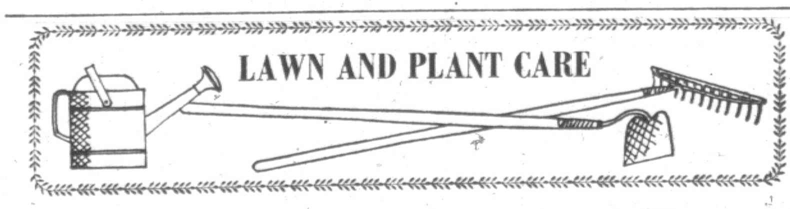
If the grass looks greener on the other side, your neighbour's probably using:
Weed 'n Feed with Killex doesn't do things by halves. It feeds your lawn with a long-lasting fertilizer that releases UF nitrogen slowly into the soil — for lush green growth. And at the same time Weed 'n Feed applies Killex, the weed killer that gets weeds even 2,4-D misses. Weed 'n Feed with Killex is lightweight, yet concentrated so a 22 lb. bag covers a full 5000 sq. feet. And it flows evenly through your lawn spreader. You can't go wrong with it.



Lawns
How many times a year should a lawn be fertilized? For best results, spring, summer and fall. What formula? Soils differ, so requirements differ. But it's generally agreed that a 20-10-5 ratio is the best overall balance. If you use a fertilizer of this type, you can be sure of good results.
Weeds—If the only weeds in your lawn are simple dandelions and plantains, a 2,4-D type of weed killer will clear them up in a hurry. Either spray with Weed-No-More or use Weed 'N Feed 20-10-5 Lightweight Fertilizer with 2,4-D.
However if you have hard-to-kill weeds such as Ground Ivy, Heal-All, Black Medick (Yellow Clover), Chickweed, etc., you'll need something more potent. Use Killex as a spray, or in the form of Weed 'N-Feed 20-10-5 Fertilizer with Killex.
Shrubs, Hedges, Evergreens
Control weeds with Green Cross Granular Weed Preventer containing Trifluralin. This chemical prevents weed seeds from germinating in the soil. So if the soil starts clean (after a good hoeing, for instance) it'll stay clean.

Youth and Enthusiasm Spice Senior Circuit

Youth and new enthusiasm have invaded the Victoria Senior Amateur Baseball League and the combination appears destined to inspire new interest in the revamped, four-team circuit.

Imperials won't have to wait long to get their first test against seasoned rivals.

They have drawn the opening-day assignment and will help launch the new campaign at Royal Athletic Park when they tangle with Greaves Movers Monday afternoon at 1:30.

Regular league action will continue at Athletic Park on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Monday evenings, with games starting at 6:30.

LEAGUE STREAMLINED

Taken over this year by the Victoria and District Amateur Baseball Association, the senior loop has been streamlined and will be under the guidance of president Bill Prior and vice-president Larry Marshall.

Returning with Greaves from last season's lineup of teams are Transport Workers and Gorge Hotel. Dropping out of competition is Lake Cowichan while Independents have been disbanded and players distributed among the three holdover clubs.

Helping to spark interest among players are a series of games against visiting clubs and the possibility of representing Canada in international competition.

League officials will select an all-star team for s succession of Saturday doubleheaders at Athletic Park against outside teams and the all-stars will also bid for a place in the national tournament and the Canadian berth an all-star tam for a succes- at the Pan-American Games in Columbia in 1971.

Canada is also planning to send a baseball team to the world amateur championships next November.

It appears there will be more than the usual incentive for excellence for players this season in the city senior swatting circuit.

LIONS SIGN TWO IMPORTS

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions of the Western Football Conference have announced the signing of two import defensive players. Signed are John Stucky, an all-conference defensive lineman last fall in the Big Eight at Kansas State, and defensive back Jones Dyson, who is dropping out of the University of Arizona with a year of eligibility remaining.

Stucky, 22, stands an even six feet tall and weighs 235 pounds. Dyson, 21, is five-feet-10 and weighs 187.

Stars Fade in Final Quarter

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Mel Daniels scored 16 of his 18 points in the final quarter Friday night to lead a closing drive that carried Indian Pacers to a 109-93 victory over Los Angeles Stars in the first game of the American Basketball Association championship final.

It was a tight battle in the first three quarters, with the score tied nine times. The Pacers held a 73-71 lead at the end of the third session.

Daniels, who had nine for 17 from the floor, and Bill Keller, who tallied eight of his 12 points in the last quarter, triggered the drive that put it out of reach of the Stars.

'HERE'S HOW IT'LL GO . . .'

Choosing up sides seems to be the thing to do as semi-finalists prepare for Sunday's Vancouver Island Open matches at Gorge Vale Golf Club. It's amateur vs. professional in both matches, 36-hole playoffs starting at 9:10 a.m. and 1:40 p.m. Dave Mick (left) has words of wisdom for fellow-amateur Jim Taylor, while Laurie Carroll whispers advice to fellow-professional Earl Davies. Mick plays Davies while Carroll tackles giant-killing Taylor for right to advance to May 24 final for The Daily Times Trophy.

Four-Under-Par Round For Cautious Roberto

FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP) — Aging Argentine Roberto de Vicenzo, playing "a little chicken," bolted out of the pack with a four-under-par 66 Friday and tied Lee Trevino and upstart Bob Smith for the second-round lead in the $125,000 Colonial National Invitational Golf Tournament.

The 46-year-old de Vicenzo, victim of the famous scoring error in the 1968 Masters, had the day's best round for a 36-hole total of 136, four under par on the proud old Colonial Country Club course that snapped back at the elite field.

"I think I am a little chicken today," declared de Vicenzo. "I played too safe."

He dropped birdie putts of one, six, 25 and 25 feet, and missed a 12-footer on the 18th that would have given him a clear-cut lead.

EVEN PAR

Trevino, who shared the first-round lead with South Africa's Gary Player, hung in with a par 70 while Smith, who had never before come even close to sharing the lead in a pro event, took a 69.

Player, along with the legendary Ben Hogan, were among the multitude that found the teeth of the course that had been humbled Thursday by a record 27 sub par scores.

Player, who said "I played like a dog on the front nine," where he took a 40, finished at 74 for 140. The 57-year-old Hogan, a five-time winner of this event, stumbled on an ailing left knee with a 77 for 146.

STROKE AWAY

Jack Nicklaus, with a 70, was in a large group at 141. Arnold Palmer and Billy Casper are not competing.

It took a score of 147 or better to make it into the final two rounds today and Sunday. A total of 77 players made it. Among the prominent casualties were Tommy Bolt and PGA champion Ray Floyd.

Assistant Leading Pay Less Tourney

JUNCTION CITY, Ore. (AP) — Ted Naff of Bellevue, Wash., shot a four-under-par 68 Friday to take the first round lead in the $25,000 Pay Less Golf Classic.

Naff, 31, has a two-stroke lead going into today's second 18 on the 54-hole Shadow Hills Country Club.

Three pros were in the runner-up deadlock at 70-Boots Portefield, Grants Pass, Ore.; Charles Leider, Burlingame, Calif.; and Buddy Sullivan, Choci, Calif.

Bill Wakeham led a four-man Victoria contingent with 36-36—72. Vaughan Trapp scored 35-39—74 while John Morgan and Dick Silverberg each had 76s.

Naff, winner of the recent Washintgon assistant pros tournament and medallist in the Washington PGA tourney, made a spectacular eagle at the 520-yard ninth hole and said "That was the key hole of my round."

Naff, an assistant pro at Glendale Country Club in Bellevue, turned pro about a year ago. He earned his tournament player's credentials only three months ago.

Three Hurt as Rally Goes Through Andes

VILLAZON, Bolivia (Reuters) — Mexico-bound drivers in the World Cup motor rally were racing into the forbidding Bolivian Andes today after a 510-mile high-speed stretch through northern Argentina which left three men in the hospital, one with a fractured spine and skull.

The trio were injured when their Triumph 2.5 plunged 20 feet down a bank on a narrow mountain road only 30 miles from the control point at La Vina, Argentina.

The crash left 34-year-old Uldarico Ossio of Peru with a fractured spine and skull. Scotsman Brian Coyle, 28, had a broken arm and a suspected skull fracture and fellow Scot Andrew Cowan, 33, suffered minor head injuries and had a cut face.

Hannu Mikkola of Finland and his Swedish co-driver, Gunnar Paom, finished the high-speed stretch first Friday in their Ford Escort to keep their leading positon in the rally.

Since the rally left London April 19 for the 16,000-mile journey, 55 of the 96 cars have dropped out, including the Mercedes driven by two Brampton, Ont., policemen, Jock Wilson and Jim Walker.

The rally is to end May 27 in Mexico City, four days before the World Cup soccer tournament begins.

Coaching Career Spanned More Than Forty Years

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Clark Shaughnessy, one of the all-time great coaches of football and often called the father of the T-formation, died Friday. He was 78.

Shaughnessy's fame was spread over more than four decades in both college and professional football, the first with the University of Chicago before it dropped football in 1939.

Shaughnessy's biggest game came when he piloted Stanford University into the Rose Bowl in 1940.

Penguin Centre On Critical List

MONTREAL (CP) — Michel Briere, 20, rookie centre of Pittsburgh Penguins of the National Hockey League, arrived here by airplane early today from Val d'Or, Que., and was rushed to hospital for treatment of injuries suffered in an automobile accident Friday night.

No immediate report on his condition was available.

Briere and two companions were injured when the car in which they were riding left the highway on a curve, seven miles west of Briere's hometown of Malartic, Que.

The ambulance taking Briere to Val d'Or struck and killed Raymond Perreault, 18, of Malartic.

In his final season as a junior, in 1968-69, Briere counted 75 goals and 86 assists for Shawinigan Bruins of the Quebec Junior A League.

Briere was a key factor in the Penguins' first appearance in the Stanley Cup playoffs in their three-year history in the NHL.

He counted 12 goals and 32 assists for 45 points during the regular season, third in team scoring behind veterans Dean Prentice and Ken Schinkel who had 51 and 45 points respectively.

Briere counted five goals and three assists in the playoffs.

SIGNED to coach hockey team next season at Mount Royal Junior College in Calgary is Bert Olmstead (above), former National Hockey League coach and player.

TWAMLEY WON'T PLAY . . . . . . IN TONIGHT'S MATCH

Newcastle Sprinkled With Stars

Twamley, the 17-year-old graduate of Victoria's minor soccer ranks who played with the Ipswich Town organization in England during the past season, won't be in the lineup with Victoria Royals for tonight's exhibition match against Newcastle United from the English League's first division.

Officials of the Royals had hoped Bruce would be able to work against the touring side tonight (8 p.m.) at Royal Athletic Park.

Twamley, who arrived back in Victoria Thursday night, will not be permitted to perform with the Royals, a new entry in the Western Canada Soccer League, until registration details have been ironed out with Ipswich.

At any rate, he would still have missed tonight's match because of an ankle injury suffered during a Zambian tour by the Ipswich reserves.

Royals, under the direction of playing-coach Brian Hughes, a former Welsh international, will be facing a rugged foe in Newcastle. Winners by a 3-0 count over Royals at Nanaimo last weekend, the tourists are richly sprinkled with noted stars, including Bobby Moncur, Bryan Robson, Keith Dyson, Ian McFaul, Tommy Gibb, David Craig and Ollie Burton.

One-Hitter Fired By Mets' Seaver

'Ration Program' Helps New York Into Contention

By UP International

The New York Mets' "ration program" soon may find them moving back into the National Baseball League's eastern division lead.

On Wednesday, Gary Gentry limited Chicago to one hit as the defending world champions beat the Cubs. Friday, Tom Seaver duplicated the feat, allowing only a third-inning single by Mike Compton as the Mets sent the Philadelphia Phillies to their eighth straight loss, 4-0.

The victory, Seaver's seventh against one loss, moved the Mets to within a half game of division leading Chicago, which lost to the St. Louis Cardinals 1-0.

STRIKES OUT 15

Seaver struck out 15 batters to raise his major league lead to 88 as he pitched the Mets' third one-hitter in less than a month. Nolan Ryan recorded a one-hitter earlier this season.

In other National League play, Atlanta edged Cincinnati 3-1, Montreal nipped Pittsburgh 2-1, Los Angeles whipped San Francisco 11-5 and San Diego outslugged Houston 10-8, in 10 innings.

In American League action, Baltimore beat Washington 4-3 in 11 innings, Cleveland blanked Boston 3-0, New York beat Detroit 4-1, Chicago downed Kansas City 9-3 and California edged Oakland 5-4. The Minnesota at Milwaukee game was rained out.

COLD SUFFERER

Seaver, who pitched despite a bad cold, said his higher strikeout total this season comes from "stamina built up over the last three years from maturity and experience." He extended his shutout string against the Phillies to 34 innings while Joe Foy and Jerry Grote had run-producing singles to highlight the Met attack.

Henry Aaron homered and doubled to draw within three hits of the coveted 3,000-hit mark and Rico Carty extended his hitting streak to 30 games with two singles as the Braves beat the Reds.

Aaron doubles in the sixth inning and scored on Carty's single to tie the score at 1-1 and his 15th homer with a man on in the eighth for the margin of victory. Jim Nash recorded his fifth victory for the braves.

SECOND STRAIGHT

Dan McGinn pitched a five-hitter for his second straight victory as a starter as the Expos nipped the Pirates. Montreal scored both its runs in the sixth on singles by John Bateman and Ron Fairly.

Jose Cardenal's broken-bat single drove in Joe Hague from third base in the seventh inning with the game's only run as the Cardinals edged the Cubs. Cardenal's game winning hit came after singles by Hague and Mike Shannon, his first hit of the season, and a fielder's choice. Mike Torrez and Billy McCool combined for the shutout.

Two-run homers by Willie Crawford and Tom Haller highlighted a six-run first inning that carried the Dodgers past the Giants. Wes Parker also homered for Los Angeles. Willie Mays hit the 607th and 608th homers of his career, each with a runner on, to account for four giants' runs.

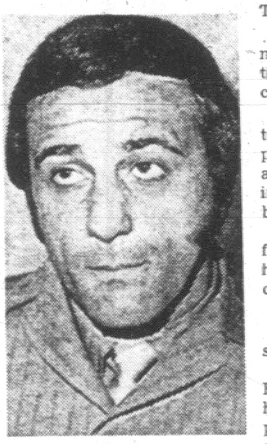
Gunned Boxer In Poor Shape

(Times News Services)

Police in Jersey City, N.J., today continued to look for a motive and the two gunmen who shot and critically wounded former light heavyweight boxer Frankie De Paula on Thursday.

De Paula, 30, who was shot in the back and left arm, was reported in poor condition today.

Police quoted eyewitnesses as saying De Paula was running not far from his home, when two pursuing gunmen opened fire. The gunmen escaped.



FRANKIE DePAULA

He is under indictment with two gamblers on charges of perjury resulting from his appearance before a grand jury investigating alleged sports bribery.

Skip Sharp With Bat As Labs Climb Notch

Porteous drove in three runs as Labatts clipped William Head Steelers 4-1 to move into fourth place, one point back of the Steelers and Bell's Men's Wear, who are deadlocked in the second berth.

After singling in the third inning to drive in pitcher Dusty Miller with what proved to be the winning tally, Porteous gave Miller an extra cushion with a two-run homer in the fifth.

The Victoria native, who practises six hours a day, Friday defeated Toronto's Fred Hardwick with a 103 break. In the same match, Thorburn made a complete table break, potting 15 reds, 15 colors and all the colored balls.

Jill Meet Star

Jill Pelland was the brightest star Friday afternoon as track and field athletes at Oak Bay Senior High School competed in their annual inter-house meet.

Winning six events and picking up points in other contests, Miss Pelland breezed to the junior girls' individual championship as she collected the impressive total of 68 points.

Jill set a new meet record as she won the 80-metre hurdles in 12.7 seconds and added triumphs in the 100 and 220-yard dashes, the shot put, the high jump and the long jump.

One other record was established in girls' events. Shelley Winter, also a winner in the mile, posted a new standard in the 880-yard run with a clocking of two minutes, 28.6 seconds.

THREE-WAY DEADLOCK

Sarah Angus took the senior girls' individual title with 38 points while Norm Morgan, Dan Miles and Dan Ryan each earned 30 points to finish in a three-way deadlock for senior boys' honors.

Al Weicker collected 28 points to pace the junior boys.

Miles was a triple winner with triumphs in the 100 and 220-yard sprints and in the long jump.

Ryan cracked a record by winning the 300-metre hurdles in 38.4 seconds and added victories in the 440 and 880-yard runs.

Other winners among the boys were Weicker (two miles), Neil Rahn (high jump), Dan Lomas (triple jump), Bruce Dryden (shot put), Ray Cowie (discus) and Bob Ross (mile).

Also chalking up wins in girls' events were Stina Thorsell (javelin), Ann Waters (discus) and Betty Horton (880 yards).

House I (318 points) won the team title and was followed by House IV (284), House III (269) and House II (256).

Triple Wins Highlight Lansdowne Track Meet

Reason for the batch of new marks was a simple one. This year the school switched to metric distances for track events.

Highlighting the meet were triple victories in junior contests by Linda Saunders, Chris Clarkson and Fraser Syme.

Miss Clarkson, winner of the 400-metre, 800-metre and discus events, added a second in the javelin to win the individual aggregate title in the girls' division. Miss Saunders first in the long and high jumps and the 100 metres, was also fourth in the 400 metres.

Syme took the 400 and 800-metre runs and the triple jump to nail down the boys' crown.

SENIOR CHAMPIONS

Capturing senior titles were Ronnie Hinde, who paced the girls with triumphs in the 800-metres and high jump, a second in the long jump and a third in the 100-metres; and Vaughan Dickson, who won the javelin and discus and finished second in the two sprints.

Double winners in running events for senior boys were Hugh Macdonald (200 and 400) and Ernie Carson (800 and 1,500.)

Margo Richardson, taking the 100 and 200-metre dashes, was runner-up in the senior girls' section, in which triumphs were also recorded by Bev Draper, Leslie Lee, Donna Jamieson, Marion Main and Rosemary Fuller.

Among the junior boys, Barry Barter and Andy Jankowski each collected two victories and single wins were posted by Dennis Opseth, Brian Mann and Bill Yalego.

House I (331 points) captured the team crown and was followed by House IV (313½), House III (244½) and House II (232).

South Africans Expelled From Games Participation

AMSTERDAM (UPI)—The International Olympic Committee, finally taking action on a problem it has kicked around the past 10 years, Friday expelled South Africa from Olympic competition.

The IOC, under pressure to ban South Africa because of the country's apartheid policies which prohibit multi-racial sports competition, approved expulsion by a 35-28 vote. There were three abstentions.

The action withdrawing recognition of the South African National Olympic Committee means the country cannot participate in Olympic Games competition. It could also mean exclusion from all other theatres of international sport.

The Supreme Council of African Sport (SCAS) laid charges against the South African Olympic Committee of non-compliance of Olympic charter rule No. 1 which prohibits discrimination against any country or person on grounds of race, religion or political affiliation.

This was the first time a country has been expelled from the movement, although there have been instances of individual members being thrown out.

The brief announcement read by Monique Berlioux, press and public relations officer of the IOC, said simply: "The International Olympic Committee decided today to withdraw recognition of the South African National Olympic Committee."

The decision ended a campaign started by the Soviet Union in 1959. The expulsion movement has gathered momentum since 1963 when the republic was excluded from the Tokyo Olympics. Mexico City also did not send an invitation.

The republic has either been suspended or expelled from the table tennis, weightlifting, boxing, soccer, basketball and fencing federations and the others are likely to follow the lead of the IOC.

SCAS, whose case was presented by Nigeria's Abraham Ordia, warned the IOC that if it retained the status quo — South Africa remained an IOC member without being invited to compete at the Games — which was confidently forecast by most observers, then they would boycott the 1972 Munich games.

One IOC official said afterwards: "This question has dragged on for 10 years and with the new threat of disruption to the 1972 Games it was thought best to end it once and for all."

Ordia said: "Please don't offer congratulations. This is not a happy day. Now I hope there will be a change of policy inside South Africa so that my brothers can come and compete in the Games. It has been a hard lesson."

From My Side Of the Tube . . .

By WALTER McKINNON

A quarter of a century ago the United States unleashed in anger mankind's first nuclear killing machine.

In August of 1945 atomic bombs were dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki in Japan. The world hasn't forgotten—and now, for the benefit of those of us who weren't on hand for the big show, the CBC is going to let us see what it was like.

Sunday evening at 10 p.m. on Weekend the network will be screening 16 minutes of film footage shot just after the bombs were dropped.

A CBC statement claims the footage was originally seized by U.S. occupation forces, and since then has been locked up in a dusty Pentagon vault, suppressed by the Americans.

Further film, shot by an American in an aircraft flying behind the bomb-carrying plane over Hiroshima, also will be shown.

The network's reason for screening the film is obscure. Conceivably they want to show us that War Is Hell—but there must be a better way.

Tonight

AN ODYSSEY in the Cosmic Universe of Peter Max (honest, that's the real name) is the Fifth Dimension's first TV special (9:30 p.m., Channels 2 and 6) and the Fifth Dimension is a musical group. The show features a trip to the Land of Lost Things.

JACKIE GLEASON (7 p.m., Channel 8; 7:30, Channel 7, 12), offers songs, skits, dance and bluster, vintage 1967. When the Halsey Street amateur show announces a $200 prize, you can be sure the "Honeymooners" will be there. So tune in for Ralph's bullying rehearsals with puddin' head Ed (a perfect showcase for Gleason and Carney); a battle royal when the girls decide to enter the contest on their own; Alice's bet with Ralph that she and Trixie will win; and the bloomin' competition itself.

ANDY WILLIAMS (7:30 p.m., Channel 5), features his wife Claudine Longet singing "Love," and joining her husband and guest Andy Griffith for a number of skits. The two Andys play a version of "Hamlet" for a small town variety show; Griffith is seen as a medicine man; Williams solos to "Funny Valentine"; and the Osmond Brothers tackle a few Beatles' hits.

Live from the Miami Beach Auditorium in Florida: The festivities surrounding the crowning of Miss U.S.A. 1970, selected from among 51 entrants (one from each state plus the District of Columbia). The 90-minute show (19 p.m., Channel 7), co-hosted by June Lockhart and Bob Barker, spotlights the 15 finalists as they compete for the coveted title which makes the winner the choice to represent the U.S.A. in the "Miss Universe" contest to be held in July. Rick Nelson is the show's singing star.

Sunday

NBC's weekly ecology series (5:30 p.m., Channel 5), turns its attention to the possibility that uranium mines in Colorado and Utah may be in the hazardous position of being affected by radioactivity. This is a subject upon which technologists disagree, and the program explores their differing points of view as well as the condition of some of the miners who work in the mines.

ED SULLIVAN (8 p.m., Channels 2, 6, 7, 12), features lots of singing as the Lettermen turn up for "Going Out of My Head" and "She Cried;"; Phyllis Newman sings some tunes and offers impressions from her nightclub act; Lovelace Watkins performs; and the West Point Glee Club sings "America, the Beautiful" and a medley of George Gershwin songs. For variety, Ed has three comedians, Rodney Dangerfield, Pat Cooper and Stu Gilliam, on tap for their monologues.

"A WORD FROM OUR SPONSOR" (Cosby, 8:30 p.m., Channel 5), is a delightful episode. Chet is cast as a football coach in a breakfast food commercial. To prepare for his new role as an actor, he takes quick lesson from the school's speech teacher who advises him to get into the character and pretend he's the box of cereal. The storyline holds up right through the filming of the actual commercial, and adds up to one of the best shows of the series.

Leonard Nimoy puts the icing on the concluding portion of the show about mind-destroying drugs (Mission: Impossible, 10 p.m., Channel 7, 12). He took a back seat last week, but Nimoy comes on strong here as the cold, clever military lawyer in court, defending Jim Phelps, ready to destroy the Iron Curtain scientist. Court scenes arouse the most interest, while viewers will get a kick out of agile Barney's shenanigans in dropping the immobilizing drugs.

An interesting legal question sustains until near the end when it gets bogged down in its own rhetoric (The Bold Ones, 10 p.m., Channel 5). Our heroes have just successfully defended a man (Mel Torme) on a murder rap, only to have him confess at a post-trial celebration that he did it. Since such an admission is privileged, they soon must face the puzzle of defending a common thief, subsequently accused of the same crime.

Monday

Hooterville is faced with a population drop (Green Acres, 8 p.m., Channels 2 and 6) so Oliver mobilizes his resources to make the farm community more appealing to young people.

Martha Raye and Tim Conway join Carol (CAROL BURNETT, 8:30 p.m., Channel 8; 10 p.m., Channels 7 and 12) in a salute to 20th Century Fox. Everything from Shirley Temple and Charlie Chan to The Fly gets spoofed.

The Civilized Men (Name of the Game, 9 p.m., Channels 2 and 6) has investigator Dan Farrell in Florida, probing charges that a crime syndicate is engaged in stealing cattle and selling tainted meat.

VENTILATION BETTER --BUT SHE COMPLAINS

SHEERWATER, England (UPI) — Mrs. Doris Rigby complains that gas board contractors attempting to improve ventilation at her home knocked a hole in a wall in the wrong place. This burst a water main that flooded the apartment. Then they laid the carpets on the lawn to dry. But garbagemen thinking they were rubbish carried them away.

Now Mrs. Rigby has no carpets, no hot water and a hole

Now Mrs. Rigby has no carpets, not hot water and a hole in the wall. She says she wants immediate action.

Early Premiers Were Colorful — Historian

Who was John Foster McCreight?

"As a province we have a curious habit of caring only about the here and now," Uvic hispory professor Sydney Jackman said this week.

McCreight — the first premier of British Columbia — has just about vanished from historical memory. He didn't last long as premier (Nov. 13, 1871, to Dec. 20, 1872) because "he was too much of a gentleman."

OFFBEAT

Jackman has written an informal history of the province, Portraits of the Premiers, and he revealed some of the more offbeat incidents surrounding B.C.'s early leaders in a speech at St. Joseph's Hospital.

McCreight was an Irish barrister who immigrated to Australia and it is not really known why he came to Vancouver Island. He lived on Michigan Street and was later named a judge.

One of the mysterious aspects of his life is his unhappy marriage, said Jackman. His wife appears to have been "frozen out" by the establishment and later disappeared. One story has it that she died in a mental home.

BLACKEN BEARD

The professor touched on several of the more colorful early premiers. History records that Amor de Cosmos, the province's second premier, used shoe polish to blacken his beard in later life.

Jackman's talk was delivered at a dinner organized by the Sisters of St. Ann and honoring the hospital's long service employees.

Mrs. Elsa Stephens, RN, chief admitting officer, was presented with the Margaret Flanagan Memorial Award, which goes to "the student nurse or any other hospital employee who has shown outstanding qualities of kindness, sympathy and compassion for those who are suffering or seriously ill."

Mrs. Beulah Smith was awarded a 25-year pin and 17 employees qualified for 15-year pins.

Trudeau Successful Diplomat

AUCKLAND (Reuters) — Prime Minister Trudeau has done more in three days to bring Canada closer to New Zealand than conventional diplomacy has achieved in 30 years, says the New Zealand Herald, the country's largest daily newspaper.

In an editorial, headed "Diplomat with a Difference," The Herald says Trudeau's freshness, directness of approach and eagerness to go among the people have clearly won a warm response from New Zealanders.

His intellectual powers have been impressive, the editorial says.

The Herald says that those who were hoping for a manifestation of Canadian presence in this region will applaud the assistance which Trudeau announced for the University of South Pacific of Fiji.

"Exactly what Mr. Trudeau and the New Zealand government told each other in private discussion is not likely to become generally known, but it would be surprising if a new measure of understanding had not been created.

"The visit has been a classic example in a skeptical world of how personal diplomacy can still count for a lot."

LONDON (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau's newly-disclosed penchant for rubbing noses has again won him the photographic limelight in British newspapers.

"Trendy Trudeau might be 50 and balding but he's still irresistible, it seems, to women round the world," says the mass-circulation Daily Mirror about the photo showing the prime minister rubbing noses with a pretty blonde in New Zealand.

Deaf Theatre Introduces New Art Form

TORONTO (CP) — The National Theatre of the Deaf in New York City is introducing a new art form to its audiences, turning the spoken language into a visual one, a member of the theatre said Friday.

Lou Fant, the son of deaf parents, said actors like himself who have their hearing and others who are deaf appear on stage at the same time, the deaf using sign language and the others saying the lines aloud . . . "There have been times when the audience couldn't tell where the voices were coming from," he said.

"This is when audiences forget there are deaf actors up there and think of them merely as actors performing a new kind of art form."

The theatre has one company which plays to schools.

Calgary Musical In Arts Centre

Written and directed by Christopher Newton, You Two Stay Here, the Rest Come With Me features an eight-piece rock group and a large cast.

Music for the production was composed by Allan Rae, who won awards at the Czechoslovakia Festival in 1966 and 1967, and at the Alberta Centennial Competition.

BE WISE . . . IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

Czechs Top World At Beer Drinking

By EVALEEN ELLIS

PRAGUE — The greatest beer drinkers in the world are not the Irish, the English, the Germans or the Danes, but the Czechs. Which is surprising when you consider that the national drink is slivovice, a plum brandy served as an apertif or a liqueur. Many Czechs are also dedicated imbibers of their country's wines and never touch anything sudsy.

Probably no other nation in the world has beer listed among its tourist attractions. One world tourist guide, describing Czechoslovakia, places beer right up along with sports, spas, intriguing architecture, works of art, good food and famous crystal.

When the latest tally of beer quaffing records gave the stein to the Czechs, maybe the neighboring Germans and the Danes, who take their beer drinking seriously, were surprised, but the Czechs weren't.

They sometimes have a quart of beer with breakfast and often finish off a heavy dinner of thick soup, goose, dumplings, sauerkraut and rich dessert with a bottle of beer, a beverage which they consider to be a good digestive.

Tourists who fly Czechoslovak Airlines on the morning flight out of Prague for London, as I have done on a couple of occasions, are usually surprised when they are served beer with a breakfast of rolls, cheese and cold meats.

Incidentally, Canadians rank only tenth among the big beer drinkers of the world. And running close to the Czechs are not the Germans or the English or the Danes, but the Belgians.

Wild hops have grown in Czechoslovakia since time immemorial and hops have been a cultivated crop here for more than a thousand years. In fact, hops grown today in Europe and North America are claimed to be descendants of Czech ancestors. This country still supplies two-thirds of its hop harvest to breweries in 60 countries around the world.

Called "green gold" here, hops give beer its distinctive flavor. The essence of the flavor is in lupilin, found in hops, and Czech hops have the reputation for being rich in lupilin, which is also used in medicine as a sedative. Perhaps the expression "getting looped" owes its derivation to the lupilin in hops.

The two famous brewery towns, Pilsen and Ceske Budejovice, are both in Bohemia.

Pilsen, along with its heavy industry, is also rich in architectural treasures, including the Gothic figure of the Pilsener Madonna in St. Bartholomew's Church. Renaissance, Baroque, Empire and Neo-Gothic buildings surround the town square.

Worth visiting are the folklore museum and old churches, and worth taking time for picture snapping are the houses with facades painted by the Czech artist, Mikolas Ales. Most visitors want to see the home of original Pilsener beer and if they walk through the 5½ miles of beer cellars they will certainly work up a thirst.

Ceske Budejovice is the home of the original Budvar or Budweiser beer. When I arrived there around five in the afternoon not long ago to meet some friends in a hotel on the town square — one of the largest squares in Europe — we ended up doing what all the Ceske Budejovicians do at the end of their workday — having a glass of Budvar.

After that there was time before dark for a look around the square with its huge Samson fountain and arcaded buildings.

TIMBER-R ENDS TALK

CORFE, England (UPI) — The 40-foot oak tree standing smack in the middle of the 17th fairway at a local golf club was for a long time the subject of heated discussions among club members. Some angry golfers wanted it cut down saying it wrecked their game, others wanted it kept as a feature of the course.

The discussion has now ended — someone cut it down in the dead of night.

Ruling German Party Shows Complacency

By JOHN M. GOSHKO

SAARBRUECKEN, West Germany (WP) — Amid floods that drove scores of delegates from their hotels, Chancellor Willy Brandt's Social Democratic Party this week concluded its annual convention.

For three days, Tuesday to Thursday, while wind and water beat against the roof of the enormous Saar international fair hall, SPD delegates debated policy and strategy for their party which only last October became the dominant force in the West German government.

And, to the surprise of neutral observers, the spirits of the Social Democrats seemed as damp and cheerless as the weather outside.

The Social Democrats are enjoying power for the first time in more than 40 years and their leader, Brandt, has emerged as the most exciting and closely watched political figure in western Europe.

Yet, in contrast to the gusto and emotionalism for which SPD conventions were noted during the party's long years on the outside, the 1970 meeting was characterized mainly by boredom, listlessness and going through the motions.

The meeting was not entirely without fireworks — caused chiefly by a rebellious young left-wing faction. At one point, the group ignited a furious debate over the U.S. intervention in Cambodia and at other times they engaged in obstructive filibusters and offered hundreds of resolutions expressing displeasure with the policies of the party.

But, while the militants were colorful to watch, their antics were essentially a side show that had little real impact on the convention. Except in the Cambodia debate where they touched a sensitive enough nerve to force passage of a resolution implying criticism of U.S. policy, their strength turned out to be far less than the amount of noise they made.

Instead, what had thoughtful party veterans concerned was the dull edge that seems to have overtaken the SPD leadership on the eve of events crucial to the party's future.

Next Thursday, Brandt will hold the second of his precedent-setting meetings with East German Premier Willi Stoph — talks that are the linchpin of his multi-pronged drive to bring about a West German rapprochement with eastern Europe.

And next month, voters in the populous states of North Rhine-Westphalia, Lower Saxony and the Saarland will go to the polls in regional elections marking the first public reaction to the Brandt government. The balloting will have a big role in determining whether Brandt can hold together the SPD's fragile governing coalition with the tiny Free Democratic Party.

Militants Have Little Impact

For these reasons, most observers had expected the convention here to be a springboard from which the SPD would launch significant initiatives designed to insure the success of the Stoph meeting and a subsequent strong showing in the June elections.

But, as one American here put it ,"the delegates acted like a baseball team that just finished a long, tough drive to win the pennant and that now is experiencing a dangerous letdown on the eve of the World Series."

Even Brandt failed to strike any of his customary sparks in his long sumup address. Essentially, what he promised was a continuation of what is known among Social Democrats as the "Godesberg Route."

This is a reference to the 1959 SPD convention in Bad Godesberg when Brandt brought about the transformation of the SPD from a rigid Marxist party with a limited class appeal to a broadened, pragmatically liberal organization similar to the liberal wing of the Democratic party in the United States.

Although this was the formula that enabled the party to build its strength over the past decade and eventually capture power, it is also the reason for the discontent of the young militants.

They want to steer the SPD back to the socialist programs of class struggle and quick, sweeping domestic reform. In their view, the party has betrayed its origins because when it was out of power, it followed a strategy of moving gradually to keep the voters from becoming frightened.

Now, they say, the SPD holds the chancellorship but the party is still moving gradually and behaving responsibly, lest its coalition partner, the Free Democrats, become frightened and break up the partnership.

SIX-YEAR OLD HELPS FRUSTRATE HIJACK BID

BRISBANE, Australia (AP) — A six-year-old girl helped frustrate a hijack attempt at Sydney airport.

Keri Kelly accidentally opened an emergency exit as the hijacker was threatening pilot James Farrell with a toy gun in a plastic bag.

Because the door was opened, members of the ground crew were able to unload the passengers and creep up behind the would-be hijacker and overpower him.

Farrell said afterward that the gunman told him: "Take me out of Sydney. I am all hung up here."

'HOW TO BE SENSUAL AND DRIVE HIM WILD'

TORONTO (CP) — Freda Bradley agrees with militant feminists that men regard women as objects, "essentially a thing, a possession."

Unlike the feminists, she welcomes the idea and praises it in a book—How to be Sensual and Drive Him Wild—which goes on sale today.

The book, described by one Toronto reviewer as "the sane alternative, or, depending upon your politics, an immense dirty joke," is the first part of a double-barrelled anti-feminist project by Mrs. Bradley, the wife of advertising man Mike Bradley.

After testing her theories on the subject as an a gogo dancer on the Yonge Street strip and as a stripper in a private club, she's setting them out in a second book.

HTBS and DHW explains how to convey "ownership" to a man ("lower your lashes, hunch your shoulders") how to serve food ("kneel down") how to use body cosmestics ("an oiled body is so effective").

She comments: "Men cherish and protect possessions somewhat more than they value people and personal relationships.

By OTTO DOELLING

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — An ever-growing flood of manuscripts smuggled from the Soviet Union testifies to the vitality of a Russian literary underground, despite all efforts by the Communist regime to suppress it.

Out of the U.S.S.R. comes novels, poems, political pamphlets and tracts, some disclosing information which ordinarily would be available only to the Soviet secret police.

Much of this stream finds its way to the Frankfurt office of Michel Slavinsky, house called Posev-Sowing. The presses of Posev produced works by Nobel Prize-winner Boris Pasternak before he received international acclaim, and by Alexander Solzhenitsyn, considered by many to be Russian's greatest living writer.

Slavinsky, French-born son of a czarist naval officer, says he expects that the Soviet crackdown on Solzhenitsyn, author of Cancer Ward and The First Circle, to inspire an even greater output of underground works by defiant Russian writers.

As proof that the writers have joined battle with the regime Slavinsky points to the growing number of "samizdat", self-publication, works being produced in the U.S.S.R. These reach wide audiences through a chain-letter device. The originator makes four copies to send to four friends. Each is asked to make four copies to send to four others, a process by which hundreds of thousands can be reached eventually.

ROUTES NUMEROUS

Underground manuscripts get to the West in a number of ways. Some simply are mailed by way of neutral countries. Others are carried out by travellers. Some are in microfilm, some on sound tapes.

One important underground periodical comes out at regular intervals. Called Chronicles of Current Events, it began publication two years and a dozen issues ago.

Since then, Chronicles has brought to light many aspects of Soviet dissent. It has given details of Russian criticism of the invasion of Czechoslovakia. It carried material on the confinement of dissident writers to asylums.

It even carried textual extracts of KGB interrogations, which caused some in the West to speculate that Chronicles had contacts within the secret police organization.

Posev publishes much of what Chronicles produces.

Slavinsky says Posev prints digests of its two periodicals, a political monthly called Posev and a literary quarterly called Grani-Aspects, and mails thousands at random to the Soviet Union. He says up to 70 per cent get through because postal employees cannot open all the mail.

Boss Allowed To Pinch Girl Workers

LONDON (CP) — Bottom-pinching of shapely girl workers by a factory boss is not grounds for his dismissal, the High Court ruled Friday.

The court awarded damages to Montagu Myers, 47, a factory production manager who was bounced for fondling feminine employees.

The court stated firmly that it did not hold with the company's contention that factory efficiency was impeded by Myers' bottom - pinching of some girls at a Shoreditch, London, factory.

Myers, who had earned £4,000 ($10,400) a year, was awarded half a year's pay less tax, plus court costs amounting to about $7,800.

The firm had alleged that Myers was fired for loss of production and that it was justified in dismissing him because this had been contributed to by bad language, drinking and pinching of girl workers.

Mr. Justice Henry Fisher, 52, a son of the former archbishop of Canterbury, handed down the decision that pinching behinds does not necessarily contribute to factory inefficiency.

He found that on the evidence of a Sadie Allen, Myers had "grabbed her backside" while she was bending over. He also ruled that on two occasions the boss had slapped a girl named Jean "on the behind."

But his lordship stated he did not hold with the company's allegation that this impeded factory efficiency and that the company was entitled to dismiss Myers.

'Chew-In' Promotes Happiness

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In these troubled times on U.S. college campuses, one group thinks it has found a simple way to promote peace and happiness: chewing bubble gum.

At the University of California at Los Angeles, a somewhat loosely organized bunch calling itself Headquarters of World Happiness is passing out 106,009 pieces of gum.

The aim: a massive "chew-in" May 22 at all nine campuses of the University of California, with the raw material to be supplied free.

Blowing bubbles brings happiness, says a group member, Ron Shendrov, 23. "A lot of people have forgotten about bubble gum, just as they've forgotten their childhood," he explains.

The group's venture was inspired by "Pink Happiness Day" last February, at which UCLA students munched 30,000 pieces of gum and popped uncounted bubbles.

Shendrove says the group got a bulk rate of $447 for the 106,009 pieces of gum.

Czech Envoy Defects To West

ADDIS ABABA (Reuters) — Wladimir Krula, first secretary of the Czechoslovak embassy, has defected to a Western country reliable Czechoslovak sources in the Ethiopian capital said Friday.

A spokesman at the embassy said Krula had left Addis Ababa but added he had no idea where the diplomat had gone.

Channel Islands Mark Liberation From Germans

By ROBERT G. OLIPHANT

Jersey placed on sale four multicolors May 9. They celebrate the 25th anniversary of the liberation of the Channel Islands from German occupation.

The 4-pence bears a reproduction of a painting by Sir James Gunn, RA, of Jersey's bailiff during the occupation, Sir Alexander Coutanche (now Lord Coutanche of St. Brelade and the City of Westminister). Shown on the 5-pence is a portrait of Prime Minister Winston Churchill (1874-1965). Beneath that likeness, which was done by D. Van Praag, is an excerpt from a speech by Churchill: "And our dear Channel Islands are also to be freed today."

The preceeding set was photogravure printed by Courvoisier.

Also on May 9, the Bailiwick of Guernsey issued pictorials for the liberation anniversary. Four-pence, 5d and 1s 6d are the values.

Last month the Cook Islands issued seven of their definitives overprinted for the safe return of the Apollo 13 astronauts. The values are: 4c, 8c, 15c, 20c, 30c, $2 and $4. The overprint on all seven reads: "Kia Orana Apollo 13 Astronauts. Te Atua to Tatou Irinakianga." Kia Orana are Maori words of greeting, and the latter Maori sentence means: "In God we trust."

Many nations this year are issuing stamps for a united Europe ("Europa") through CEPT, which stands for: the Conference of European Postal and Telcommunications Administrations (founded 1959). The omnibus 1970 Europa-CEPT motif is a curcular interlacement of 24 fibers. (CEPT has 24 members). It was designed by Dr. Louis le Bracquy of Dublin, Ireland.

April 21 was the date on which Greece placed on sale two Europa-CEPT stamps. A third Greek pictorial for Europa-CEPT will come out later this year.

The 2-shilling Europa-CEPT stamp from the minuscule British colony of Gibraltar features an interesting landmark in the colony — Europa Point Lighthouse.

The following are some of the countries which issued their Europa-CEPT commemoratives May 4: Andorra (2), France (2), Iceland (2), Ireland (3), the Netherlands (2), Portugal (3), Switzerland (2), and Yugoslavia (2).

Belgium's two Europa-CEPT adhesives appeared May 2.

On April 13, the Caribbean island of Montserrat released 3c, 4c, 15c and 20c lithographed pictorials honoring the centenary of the British Red Cross Society.

The British Virgin Islands placed on sale a trio May 4 for the 100th anniversary of the death of the English novelist Charles Dickens (b. 1812). The values are: 5c, 10c and 25c.

Cadillac Not Wanted

CALGARY (CP) — Nobody wants to ride in the mayor's Cadillac.

"It is large and ostentatious and useful only as a chariot to take old ladies to cocktail parties," Mayor Rod Sykes told the city finance committee Thursday.

"I don't ride in it. The premier of this province has declined to ride in it. The minister of health has declined to ride in it.

"Apparently it was bought for the mayor because of the rarefied status he occupies. But I have no use for it.

"It's part of a phoney social status deal that I don't think the taxpayers need.

"It seems exactly the kind of car a chief of police should have."

Police Chief M. J. (Duke) Kent told the committee he wants no part of it but finally accepted a compromise that it be traded in for an additional police cruiser.

"Scalp tension, a sign of the times, is one cause of your hair loss," says Harrison trichologist to balding man. Harrison directs the famous Harrison Hair and Scalp Specialists, whose main office is in Vancouver. They are sending a specialist here to advise men and women how to correct hair troubles by home treatment.

New home treatment method for preventing baldness — and growing thicker hair — will be demonstrated in Victoria this Monday and Tuesday, May 18 and 19.

This news was released here today by A. B. Harrison, internationally famous director of Harrison Hair and Scalp Specialists.

In the announcement, Harrison named staff trichologist T. Cronshaw to conduct the Victoria clinic. Mr. Cronshaw will personally examine hair-worried men and women from 1 p.m. to 8 p.m. Monday and Tuesday at the Hotel Sussex.

Examine You Free

"I want to make it clear that you incur no obligation by seeing Mr. Cronshaw," director Harrison said. "Your only obligation is to yourself — to free your mind of worries about hair loss, dandruff, itching, or other scalp disorders, by learning how to take care of your hair. If your trouble is beyond the scope of Harrison Home Treatment, we will frankly tell you so.".

Who Can Be Helped?

"We always make a personal examination before suggesting any treatment," he pointed out. "There is no one cure-all that will correct every one of the 18 scalp disorders that cause baldness."

Will this new treatment cure baldness? "No," said Harrison sincerely. "We cannot help men who are slick-bald after years of hair loss. But where your scalp still grows hair, we can at least save and improve what you have. Usually, we can grow more hair even where you have only 'fuzz' now."

The important thing is: Don't wait until it's too late!

Best evidence of the success of Harrison treatment is the phenomenal growth behind it. Harrison trichologists hold clinics in all major cities across Canada.

"Our biggest problem is not in doing what we claim to do," declared Harrison. "But to overcome the average man's initial skepticism is sometimes difficult. He's usually quite desperate — and baldish — by the time he nerves himself to see a Harrison trichologist. He's 'tried everything'. So he starts consoling himself with one of the old superstitions about hair:

That baldness is hereditary; that men naturally lost hair as they get along in years; that nothing can be done to stop hair loss — and a lot of other notions that we know are not true today."

Free Scalp Examination

See Mr. Cronshaw in person. Learn how baldness can be corrected, and new hair grown. The new Harrison method permits you to actually correct your baldness and improve your hair in the privacy of your own home.

For a free examination and discussion of your hair problems ask the desk clerk at the Hotel Sussex Monday or Tuesday between 1 p.m. and 8 p.m. for Mr. Cronshaw's suite number. You don't need an appointment. Examinations are given in private.

Where There's Smoke There's Rain — Scientist

A University of Washington scientist says rainfall has increased more than 30 per cent near Everett and Port Townsend in the last 20 years because of increasing mill operations on Puget Sound.

Dr. Peter Hobbs, associate professor of atmospheric sciences at the University of Washington, says researchers studying artificial rain-making and the mechanisms of cloud formations have discovered some industrial plants are seeding clouds inadvertently and thus causing increased rain.

Unintentional weather modification is being created by smoke from pulp and paper mills, sawmills with woodwaste burners and from aluminum smelters, says Hobbs.

Although the obvious effects of air pollution have been under study for many years, effects of air pollution on the weather have not been considered before, he added.

★ ★ ★

He explained the research program was carried out by plane flights over several industrial plants in the Puget Sound area. The study revealed paper mills in Everett and Port Townsend emit billions of sulphate particles per second. These particles have a high affinity for water and act as centres around which cloud droplets are formed.

In the areas immediately northeast of Everett and Port Townsend the average annual precipitation during the last 20 years has been more than 30 per cent higher than it had been during the preceeding 20 years.

He attributed this to the four-fold increase in operations of the mills in the Puget Sound area since the Second World War.

Among the areas Hobbs mentions as experiencing large increases in rainfall is Victoria. But Allan McQuarrie, in charge of the Victoria weather office, said today he doesn't have the figures to support the claim.

★ ★ ★

McQuarrie said it would take a great deal of verification to show any relationship between any increased rainfall and the location of area mills.

"There might be some indications of it. I'm not convinced there has been."

Smoke can have an influence on weather but weather does vary substantially over the years and care is required in interpreting differences.

"He may or he may not be right," McQuarrie said of Hobbs' claims.

★ ★ ★

"We still don't know the real basic causes of precipitation," he added and suggested the picture the American professor presents may be "rather over-simplifying the case."

He quoted Dr. B. J. Mason, director-general of the U.K. meteorological office, who speaking to a recent seminar in Toronto on the subject said:

"Unless and until weather scientists actually understand the natural dynamics of rainfall production — that is, the air motions that control rainfall — cloud-seeding by itself constitutes only a shot in the dark towards mastering weather modifications on any useful basis."

Old Buddies to Give Some Lift To Max and His Sunken Ships

By PAT DUFOUR

The skipper's been scuppered — and it was his sea legs that forced him to finally admit defeat.

Victoria's famous old sealing skipper, Max Lohbrunner has finally accepted the fact that life afloat for him is now a thing of the past.

But Lohbrunner will never accept the fact that his beloved whaler Green and the fishboat Mel on which he lived before she sank in January 1968 are doomed to remain in their watery graves in Victoria Harbor.

HARPOON GUN

The club's president, Capt. A. G. (Lofty) Coning says:

"We have Max's written agreement that the Green's old harpoon gun and mast is ours. I've talked to the admiral and I'm hoping that the diving school will carry out an exercise and recover them for us."

If this is done the gun will be given to the Maritime Museum and the mast will be erected at Fisherman's Wharf as a permanent reminder of Victoria's old whaler fleets.

Coning says that Lohbrunner has insisted that nothing else be taken off the aged hulk.

GARBAGE WHARF

Coning doesn't share her captain's conviction that Green can be salvaged.

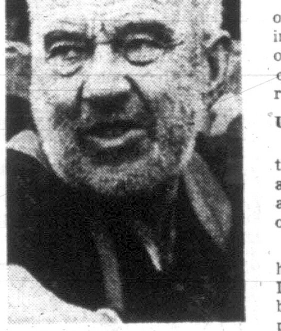
But he doesn't rule out the possibility of raising the 35-foot salmon troller which was Lohbrunner's home alongside the garbage wharf for 20 years.

"Max wants her up pretty badly because of the brass gurdies she has aboard."



LOHBRUNNER
. . . nothing else

Coning feels the sinking of the Mel has robbed Victoria of important historic material.

"Max used to sleep with his old logs beneath them. The information in them and the old charts aboard which are charted with all the old sealing routes are invaluable.

USELESS NOW

"They're useless now but they could have helped write a history of Victoria's sealing and whaling fleets, which no one has done."

Living in the home which he built for his bride at 1241 Dominion 58 years ago, Lohbrunner still makes regular pilgrimages to his vessels' graveyard.

He was at this week's meeting of the Thermopylae Club, still struggling for its survival.

And — if he loses — he still has three small boats in his basement to remind him of better days.

Principal Defies Trustees

A Victoria high school principal is urging teachers and other principals to boycott the school board's latest call for promotion and transfer applications.

Horace Dawson, principal of S. J. Willis Junior Secondary wants a united protest against the board inviting applications for major posts without specifying what positions are open.

"It shouldn't be done like so many pawns on a chessboard," he says.

In February the administration made a general call for applications to fill secondary and elementary principalships without detailing what was open. The board announced appointment or transfer of 10 principals earlier this week.

Dawson emphasizes that he is quite content with his present post and did not seek another. But he also is less than enchanted with the board's system of going beyond the school district in its search to fill senior vacancies.

He believes the board can do just as well from within the nearly 1,300 teachers in the Greater Victoria school district and it would be a lot better for their morale.

Both school board chairman Carron Jameson and trustee Peter Bunn, former chairman, emphatically disagreed with Dawson.

Schools were not specified in February to give flexibility to the appointments and the people who responded agreed to these terms, said Jameson.

The board's policy is to move principals from school to school where their talents can be used to best advantage.

"We hope at some future time teachers might be moved in a like manner."

Principals he has spoken to like the idea, said the chairman. They are concerned about growing stale if they remain in the same place too many years.

Bunn said he respects Dawson for being outspoken and courageous "but he's way off base on this one."

Both trustees defended the board's policy of searching beyond the district when filling senior posts.

"I think it's a great credit to the board they get the very best people for the education dollar," said Bunn.

★

All being equal between candidates, the one from the Greater Victoria school district gets the job, Bunn noted.

"Because the Greater Victoria school board is again playing the role of morale buster and exemplifying bureaucracy at its worst," says Dawson in a statement, "I'm challenging the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association to boycott the recent call for vice-principalships and other administrative posts in the district."

"This school district is woefully lacking in some vital needs," said Dawson. "The latest move toward secrecy in appointment and transfer of principals is most deplorable and retrograde."

Stay Home, Sun Lovers

You have more chance of seeing the sun over Victoria than most places on Vancouver Island, the weatherman says.

There may be showers or it may get cloudy, but the sun is sure to peep through Sunday and Monday.

On the west coast of Vancouver Island at Long Beach it rained Friday and it is still raining today. The forecast is for showers right through to Monday.

Showers are reported at other east coast communities as a weather system moves southward.

To cope with large crowds, B.C. Ferries have increased their sailings for this weekend, though its summer schedule does not come into effect until June 5.

Starting from 7 a.m., the ferries sail from the Swartz Bay terminal every hour on the hour until 10 p.m. This schedule will also be in effect all day Tuesday.

The bus service via the B.C. ferries will leave every odd hour today, starting at 7 a.m. and ending at 9 p.m. On Sunday every odd hour untill after 11 p.m. From then on every hour.

On Monday and Tuesday, there will be a bus service every hour.

Headmaster Ends 22-Year Tenure

John J. Timmis, headmaster of University School, will retire in August of this year, Brig. F. N. Cabeldu, chairman of the board of governors, announced today.

Timmis, headmaster for 22 years, has seen the school enrolment increase from 53 to 175 boys.

At the time of his appointment the school was operating at a loss. Today it meets all yearly expenses and has reserve funds to carry out renovations and improvements.

He will be succeeded by Richard L. Gordon, 49, of Alberta, a Rhodes scholar.

He was headmaster of St. John's-Ravenscourt School, Winnipeg, for 17 years.

There was an enrolment of just over 60 boys when he started his duties there and when he left there were over 300 boys.

STUDENTS GET BREAK TO SHOOT MOVIES

The Greater Victoria school board is offering a summer course which will have young people probing social issues by assembling movies about them.

The National Film Board will contribute $1,000 toward the experimental program and Peter Grant, the film board's local representative, will be co-director of the course.

He hopes one of the workshops will be directed by Peter Jones the NFB's senior producer for western Canada and the man who produced the critically-acclaimed Helicopter Canada.

The $1,000 grant will be used mostly for movie film. The idea is to use stills as well as assembling visual studies of social questions:

Among proposed subjects for the lens:

Housing, citizen action, pollution, self - determination of low income groups, urban renewal, teen values, attitudes to urbanization, the drug scene, municipal decision-making, changes in education.

The program is called Challenge for Change and will run from June 15 to Aug. 18. For a fee of $1 those taking part will conduct the research and do the filming after a two-week training session.

"The intent is not to make them Fellinis—but to give them an experience with film as a communications medium," says Grant.

"The National Film Board will be interested in viewing the results."

Hopefully, not just the film board.

"It is further envisioned that the finished material will be presented to or confront those who have the power to legislate change: i.e. school boards, municipal and provincial governments, business," says an explanatory note in the school board's brochure.

An organizational meeting will be held at 8 p.m. June 15 in Room 310, Institute of Adult Studies and training sessions will be held three evenings a week to the end of the month. Filming will start in July and continue three to eight weeks, whatever is needed to finish.

Grant said the training sessions will cover the philosophy of the program, legal and moral aspects and interviewing techniques.

A lawyer will discuss legal questions, two clergymen will examine ethics and a radio announcer will talk about interviewing.

Challenge for Change is part of the Summer Happening program of the school board's adult education division.

This is the third year for the summer program which has now expanded to offer 42 courses. Information is available from the adult education division at 592-1211.

Q. Is it possible to be imprisoned for witchcraft in Canada? — S. H.

A. While the practising of witchcraft in itself is not illegal the Criminal Code of Canada deems it an offence to practise the occult fraudulently. A fraud conviction can lead to a prison term.

ALL THE WORLD IS SUPposed to love a parade, but count me out. I've had it. And even though this scaly heart still quickens when the bands play and the floats roll past, I don't mean to be within sight or earshot of the Victoria Day extravaganza.

The name of my game is emancipation. It came slowly, and it took me quite a few years to realize that parade-going was no longer on the required list.

The parade habit is hard to break, especially if you have a feeling for clowns and bagpipes. But I've seen enough parades to last a lifetime, and the mere thought of standing for three hours while another passes sets my arches tingling.

A parade means distant parking, pavements to trudge, elbows in the ribs, and the endless-seeming wait until somebody hollers "Here they come!"

After all, I could be fishing, or planting Netted Gems, or just sitting in the sun, which always shines warm on parade day.

It's a long time since our young were of an age to be taken to Victoria Day parades, but I retain memories.

There was the drip-drip-drip of popsicle juice running down my neck. There was the drumming of little heels on my ribs as the child sitting on my shoulders registered excitement.

And there was also the parade when I got hit in the eye.

The pretty girls on a float were tossing oranges. Except one of them didn't toss . . . she slung an inside curve. It's hard to duck when you're jammed on all sides, and are clutching the ankles of the tot aloft.

Sympathy? All I got was "Daddy, why didn't you catch it?"

That is long past, and I don't know why we've kept right on going down to squander several hours on the annual spectacle.

Still, there's something about a parade. In spite of conviction, it's just possible I'll weaken when Monday comes. It may be hot, and the crowds will be thicker. But there'll be the sights and sounds I've mentioned, plus baton-twirling majorettes, high-stepping horses, and big bass drums grunting an undertone to the brasses.

Come to think of it, I can plant those spuds later!

For some years past, our Biritsh Columbia government has been evolving a peculiar new conservation doctrine. As a result of it, we have the elastic park which changes its boundaries and nature as industry dictates.

Strathcona is an elastic park. By an alphabet-soup game in which Class A rating becomes Class B and open to industrial intrusion—Strathcona grew smaller. Last year, timber rights on upwards of 5,000 Strathcona acres went to a logging company in exchange for 576 acres reaching back from the sea at Cape Scott.

As Vancouver Islanders understood the proceedings, that land was to form the nub of a sometime park.

We now learn that it may become an elastic park, because one tenet of conservation, B.C. style, is that what's in the ground must come out of it.

A wise government, and one with an eye to the future, would declare the area a park reserve. For whatever the value of ore bodies it may contain, it is worth infinitely more as protected parkland.

You won't find too many writers who can claim a novel up for publication this fall, and another scheduled for print next spring.

Dell Publishing Company of New York will bring out Covin's Hear That Train Blow (title changed from The Thirteenth Juor) in September.

Meanwhile, the Texas-born writer tells me he has won acceptance and a husky advance on royalties from the same house for a novel tentatively titled Many Broken Hammers. Covin's second novel is peopled by Spanish Americans in a Southwest setting.

He hasn't begun to put a third novel on paper yet—a Hollywood motion picture scripting stint may intrude—but when he does, it will probably have a Vancouver Island background.

That's it until Wednesday, and may the sun shine in spite of the weatherman!

There's a growing interest in this fascinating hobby . . . and you can learn all about it in "The Masters' Book of Bonsai" which tells you absolutely everything you need to know . . . Compiled by the directors of Japan's Bonsai Assn., and priced at $6.95 . . . If you're wearing a wig of synthetic hair, keep your head away from the oven . . . heat will ruin it.

Now's the time to choose summer sportswear . . .

Unless you live somewhere with an indoor swimming pool, you're likely not thinking too much about bathing suits at the moment . . . but do take our advice and start thinking now . . . because the time for swimsuits is fast approaching . . . and if you'd like to be able to pick and choose among an exciting array of styles . . . instead of settling for anything that looks half-way decent . . . the place to go, without any further delay, is Miss Frith's! . . . Right now they've got more different styles of swimsuits than ever before . . . all the new looks you've seen pictured in Vogue and other such high-fashion magazines plus the tried-and-true styles some of us older gals go for . . . As we said, the new styles are quite exciting! . . . Every type of material, in a painter's palette of colours . . . prints and plains . . . in interesting textures . . . Newest of all are the one-piece suits completely backless, top joined to bottom in front by narrow panel . . . We think they're very flattering . . . and allow you to get a good almost-all-over tan! . . . Of course there are plenty of bikinis, too . . . Some have the wet look . . . others are befrined or lace ruffled . . . still others are plainly tailored . . . Delightful cover-ups and tops . . . and a group of Jantzen stretch terry co-ordinates which are real fun-wear! . . . Miss Frith Fashions, 1619 Douglas St., 383-7181.

Interesting "finds" at the Handloom . . .

We never quite knew what to do with spare trays until we saw the perfectly delightful hand-woven tray hangers at the Handloom last week! . . . Quite ingenious, really . . . They're colorful strips attached to a ring made of pine needles . . . and all you have to do is slip your tray inside and hang up in a convenient spot . . . not only useful but very decorative too! . . . The same lady who makes these also makes hot plate mats out of pine needles . . . They have sort of an Oriental look . . . and you'll find them at the Handloom . . . Some new tie-dye pure silk scarves had just arrived when we were in . . . both long ones and squares, in gorgeous colors . . . These look to us a lot like batik, and we marvel at the interesting and unique patterns obtained by knotting the silk in various ways . . . Other things that took our fancy were the lovely shopping (or knitting bags, or even purses) . . . made of burlap and hand embroidered with wool . . . They're just the right size, with the sort of handle that fits comfortably over the arm . . . and there's a lovely new Tina Lyon tea set in a soft green glaze at . . . Handloom, 18 Centennial Square, 384-1011 and Empress Hotel, 384-1518.

Pretty and practical terry cloth robes . . .

After you've had your bath and splashed on your cologne and powder . . . there's nothing nicer to slip into than a terrycloth robe . . . it seems to have just the right pampering texture! . . . Other consideratiions are that terry gowns take to laundering like ducks to water . . . have just enough warmth . . . and you feel you can wear one to cook the breakfast bacon and eggs without fear of spoiling it! . . . Impacts 'n' Imports have some of the nicest terry robes we've seen . . . One long style, made of plain towelling, comes in cheerful orange or hot pink . . . with contrasting braid down the zipped front and on the long sleeves . . . Quite reasonable at $20 . . . Another looks as if it were actually made out of big, fluffy bath towels . . . It's long, with a jacquard pattern and zips right down the front . . . Gold, green or blue . . . A printed robe has a yoke and little stand-up collar . . . various colors in this, as well as a slightly different printed style . . . Then there are little shortie gowns . . . printed terry cloth with collar and fringe around bottom . . . something like happy coats . . . and priced at $17 . . . A darling little mint green one has white lace around the bottom and short sleeves . . . These shorties would be grand for around-the-pool and beach wear . . . Impacts 'n' Imports, 8 Centennial Square, 388-7023.

Nothing fills the bill better on a coolish summer evening than one of these pretty beaded or embroidered sweaters from Hong Kong . . . Wilson's have just received a shipment of these . . . mostly in white lambswool lined with silk . . . and what we especially like about them is that they're not overly ornate . . . One style is embroidered with pastel colored blossoms . . . Another is an effective white on white . . . raised white embroidered roses and tiny French knots . . . A third style is a buttonless Chanel jacket . . . bound with white satin, and discreetly embroidered with small white and pearl beads . . . Also noticed an attractively lacey white sweater which looks as if it might be hand-knit . . . though probably isn't since the price tag is just $25 . . . Wilson's have a new shipment of Irish fisherman knit cardigans and pullovers . . . knit especially for them, and by far the best-made Irish knits we've ever seen . . . Some ponchos were included in this shipment . . . Very good-looking . . . and priced at $40 . . . Sweaters are just $45 . . . And while we're on the subject of sweaters . . . be sure to see the new Shetland cardigans and pullovers with fair isle yokes . . . Colors are natural, light and dark turquoise, blue, rose and saddle tan . . . Then there's the matter of children . . . if they're under 12 years of age, they travel for half fare on the excursions . . . Other considerations . . . there's flexibility . . . You're not restricted to specific dates on these definitely scheduled flights . . . By DALE CAVANAGH

If ever there was a time to perk up your wardrobe with something different, it is now.

If you want to try something very new, why not take the suggestion of Dublin designer Irene Gilbert and add a bit of hand-smocking? Smocking gives a charming touch that so typifies the little-girl look currently filling the fashion pages.

Smocking can be used on a yoke, the lower edge of a long sleeve, at a neckline, at the top of a skirt, or even on a pocket.

Smocking takes up twice the width of the fabric. The length if not affected. If you wish to do smocking you may find it simpler to work before cutting a shaped section. Then you will be sure to have ample width. Underline yokes after smocking.

The lower edge of a sleeve can be worked after cutting. Be sure to allow ample width and allow for seams. The directions below are for honeycomb smocking, one of the prettiest and easiest versions to do.

Mark fabric to be smocked on outside with tiny dots at ½" intervals across and down in an even number of horizontal rows. Two rows are worked at a time. A depth of eight rows is just about right for the lower edge of a long sleeve.

HONEYCOMB SMOCKING

Take small stitch at dot 2 and another at dot 1. (Fig. 1.)

Repeat process, bringing dots 3 and 4 together, then 5 and 6. Continue until one double row is finished. Then start again and repeat process completing second double row below, etc. (Fig. 3.)

High School Musicians Discover Jazz As Clothes Return to Forties Styling

By FLORENCE DE SANTIS

There was Marian McPartland up there on the stage at The Downbeat, knocking out some of the best jazz piano heard today. There were her back-up men, the usual virtuosi of bass fiddle and rums. And there were 15 very young men, all from Cold Spring Harbour High School, enthusiastically putting out on the Count Basie piece Miss McPartland had announced.

For an observer who never did follow the changes in pop music very closely, the whole scene had a nostalgic quality. Not that The Downbeat ever has trouble attracting audiences to the jazz in which it specializes. The nostalgia was in the observer.

For one thing, that Cold Spring Harbor group looked so different. There wasn't any hair length longer than what used to be thought of as normal for musicians, and quite a few of the boys were clipped.

White shirts, ties and red blazers clothed them all. With the Forties rapidly returning to fashion, they were perhaps a vanguard, not a rear guard. If blazers return, can shorter hair be far behind?

Marian McPartland plays as if there were no such thing as nostalgia. Her dress was a green shift printed in bright pink flowers, with comfortably loose shirt sleeves and a shortish pleated skirt that could fall gracefully as she sat at the piano. Her only concession to the return of past fashions was her drop earrings.

Jazz, of course, hasn't rally gone away, as The Downbeat, one of New York's specialty restaurant-nightclubs, can testify. It is just hasn't been getting the overwhelming attention that has been accorded to rock. Miss McPartland has been deep in high school and college activities, lending the stimulus of her presence to young people's audiences and jazz groups to interest them in the complexities of jazz.

What seemed evident to an observer at the Downbeat concert was that complexity. Virtuosity on the instrument is the point of jazz. It's pure music, not social protest nor the vague bleatings of a "group." The variety reminded one instantly of the greater variety available to fashion when skirts are long rather than short.

When jazz was in its first heyday, fashions were a good deal more complex, also. The sound of jazz brings back the vision of bias cuts, intricate detailing, dramatic sleeves, hats, veils, shoulder bags. With all that coming back to a world bored with the simplicities of the mini, jazz too may be on the brink of renaissance.

DEAR ABBY . . .

TV Trouble

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Drop in guests have no legitimate complaint if they are ignored in favor of the idiot box. Drop ins are persons whom we never invite because almost anything the boob tube has to offer is preferable to their company.

I wish you would say a few words about people who invite you over—coaxing even, so that after several invitations you finally give in, so as not to be stigmatized as an unfriendly neighbor. And then, when the invited guest shows up at a prearranged time, the host or hostess has the television on—and loud!

Even so, the guest is not permitted to concentrate on the program because conversation must go on, despite the blaring emanating from the unwatched, but raucous, box.

Well-mannered persons would appreciate your comment on this. As for me, I've solved the problem. (Sign me) — Unfriendly Boor.

DEAR BOOR: Of all the reasons for accepting an invitation, not wanting to be "stigmatized as an unfriendly neighbor" is the poorest—for having accepted, good manners demand that you reciprocate. And why get on that kind of merry-go-round with persons you'd never invite to your home because you feel that "almost any offering from the boob tube is preferable to their company?"

DEAR ABBY: I'm being called a poor sport because I refuse to go along with the following deal:

My husband (I'll call him Paul) and I go around with a couple I will call Bill and Angie.

Paul digs Angie and Angie digs Paul. Bill digs me, but I don't dig Bill.

Paul and Angie and Bill say I am a poor sport—that it's three against one and I'm spoiling their fun. Angie keeps telling me that Bill is really great, and if I tried this wife swapping deal just once I might like it.

I just can't see it. What is your opinion?—One Man Woman.

DEAR WOMAN: I can't see it either. Ask Angie what she wants with your husband if hers is so great.

DEAR ABBY: This jazz about women being upgraded to the same status as men is, to me, a most attractive idea. If we go all the way with it.

Let the girls work in the logging industry, topping out spar trees. Let them fish the Grand Banks in midwinter. Let them work the high steel in bridge-building. Let them grow the ulcers and have the heart attacks, and forego all the courtesies one man would not give to another.

Let them coddle and take care of the men, who can then show them the same lack of appreciation they dish out. Maybe then they would quit vibrating on their abstracts and become human.

CONFIDENTIAL TO TO DYE OR NOT TO DYE: If you want my opinion, yet, I've seen many women who look "prettier" with grey hair. But none who look "younger" with it.

What's your problem? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. Write to ABBY, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif., 90069. For a personal reply enclose stamped, addressed envelope.

Wadda You Say Max?

"Fox? What fox?" Max (the dog) seemed to say as he eyed the long line of horses and riders behind him.

But he didn't have to worry. They were only taking a breather before returning to the practice ring.

Katherine Anne Porter Spent Birthday in Bed After Pulling 'Classical Old Granny Trick'

By JUDITH MARTIN

WASHINGTON (WP) — Angel food cake was served in a Maryland nursing home Friday to celebrate Katherine Anne Porter's birthday.

The grand lady of American letters is tucked away for two or three months, having pulled what she calls "that classical old granny trick" of breaking her hip.

"You're supposed to start fracturing your hip at about—well, really, a little younger. I pride myself that I beat them by about 10 years," Miss Porter said.

She was propped up in her bed for the interview. Her previous accident record, she noted, consisted of "some ribs jarred loose, and a bump on the chest I got out with a hunting party when I was 18.

"I have a good constitution and a heart like an ox. It scares me—I wonder how much it will take to kill me. I wouldn't want to live to be 97. But if I'd died 10 years ago, I would have missed some of the pleasantest experiences of my life. I'll hang on till 90 and see how it goes."

That last decade saw the publication of her only novel, Ship of Fools which brought her popular success and a fortune, but not the critical acclaim of her prize-winning short stories.

"People don't read very attentively," she said. "Everything I've written, from Flowering Judas to Pale Horse, Pale Rider through Ship of Fools, is one continuous line. But I suppose it's a horrible job to ask anyone to find out what Ship of Fools is about."

The "one basic idea" is that of "illusion, delusion and self-deception," she said. "People never know quite what they are, and they don't know how to treat other people. As a child, it struck me how little one person could understand another. I've been told so often what I think and feel, and of course they've got it all wrong. I wish they'd keep out of my mind if they're going to muddle around like that."

She said just that to one psychiatrist—a young man who talked with her in a clinic without identifying his profession.

"I told them to bring him back, and then I said, "You have no more right to come into my mind without telling me your intentions than to go into my house without knocking.' And afterwards, I saw what he had written about me. Here was a woman getting older, very much afraid of death, afraid of losing her powers. The old cut and dried picture out of any textbook. It could be the kind of old woman a young man like him would put in his first novel.

"They make up motives, and then they plaster them on people. I find it utterly maddening. My mind works the way it works, and will until I die—unless I learn something new.

It is this misunderstanding of people, to which she thinks psychiatry has made a great contribution ("Freud is the curse of the Western world—his mamma should have strangled him in his cradle") that is the theme of her work, culminating in Ship of Fools. "I suppose with a boatload of people, it gets rather tiresome," she added.

Her own life, she said, has been dictated by her temperament "and I wouldn't have missed it for anything—and I wouldn't live one minute of it over. Tomorrow we'll think of something else. You know, I never make the same mistake twice because there are a hundred other mistakes waiting for me to make them."

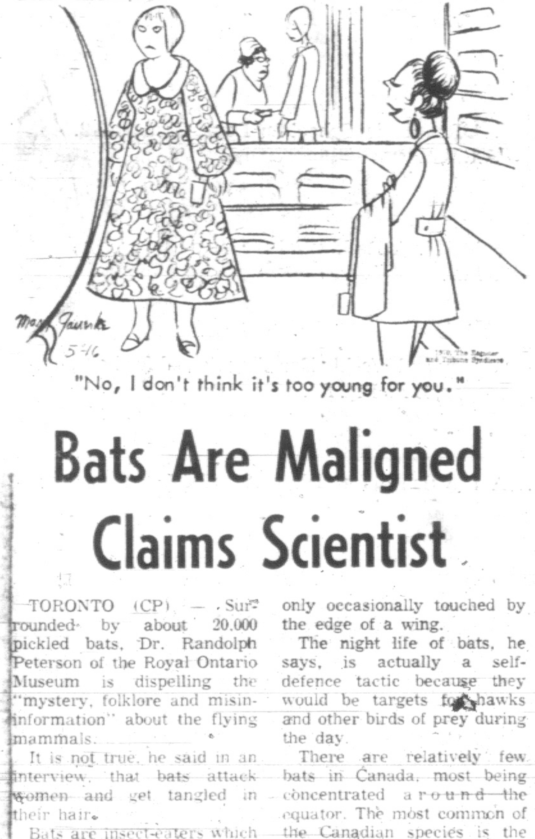
Meanwhile, there is the world of the nursing home and the more circumscribed life planned for her when she leaves.

"Oh, lord, what they do to you as you get older," she said. "They make all those rules for you. I'm going to write a funny piece about the bath. And physical therapy—that's the last straw. The therapist has the idea that if I can take 50 steps, I could take 60. I said, 'You must have trained in the marines.' And he had."

Then there's the College Park, Md., house they won't let her go back to because if has three floors.

"A whole delegation of my friends are moving me to a large flat—they think it's time for me to start falling down the stairs. I'm a bit behind schedule, you know," she added.

THE ALUMNAE



"No, I don't think it's too young for you."

Bats Are Maligned Claims Scientist

TORONTO (CP) — Surrounded by about 20,000 pickled bats, Dr. Randolph Peterson of the Royal Ontario Museum is dispelling the "mystery, folklore and misinformation" about the flying mammals.

It is not true, he said in an interview, that bats attack women and get tangled in their hair.

Bats are insect-eaters which should please any person squeamish about bugs.

Bats manoeuvre in darkness by emitting beeps which work like invisible hands enabling the bat to judge this distance from any object.

In a Jamaican cave, filled "with at least half a million bats," their sonar worked so well that Dr. Peterson was only occasionally touched by the edge of a wing.

The night life of bats, he says, is actually a self-defence tactic because they would be targets for hawks and other birds of prey during the day.

There are relatively few bats in Canada, most being concentrated around the equator. The most common of the Canadian species is the "little brown bat" — harmless but somewhat frightening because of its pig-like snout, sharp teeth and 10-inch wing span.

And vampire bats are not enormous mammals, lurking in corners, ready to feed on someone lost at night. They are small and mainly attack cattle.

Rich fruitcakes are popular treats, for festive desserts as well as hospitality.

Brimming with colorful candied fruit and richly spiced with cinnamon, allspice and cloves, these miniature cakes are delicately textured. In fact, the muffin-like quality of Miniature Nut Fruitcakes makes them equally at home as a sweet bread to accompany a meal or a dessert tidbit.

- 2 cups (1-pound jar- candied mixed fruits and peels
- ½ cup dark seedless raisins
- ¼ cup chopped candied cherries
- 1¼ cups unsifted all-purpose flour
- ½ cup peanut oil
- 2 eggs
- ¾ cup firmly packed brown sugar
- 1 tsp. salt
- ½ tsp. baking powder
- ½ tsp. ground cinnamon
- ½ tsp. ground allspice
- ¼ tsp. ground cloves
- ½ cup orange juice

In a large bowl thoroughly combine walnuts, candied mixed fruits and peels, raising candied cherries and ½ cup of flour; set aside.

In a small mixer bowl combine peanut oil, eggs and brown sugar. Beat at medium speed for 2 minutes, scraping sides of bowl occasionally. Sift together remaining ¾ cup flour, salt, baking powder, cinnamon, allspice and cloves. Stir into oil mixture alternately with orange juice. Pour mixture over nuts and fruits; blend well. Pour mixture into 24 medium-sized muffin cups lines with paper baking cups.

Mind Over Matter Important to Aged

By GAY PAULEY

NEW YORK (UPI) — "Aging is a matter of mind. If you don't mind, it doesn't matter."

With these words, one physician summed up one of the factors that mean better health in the later years—the attitude that one has toward growing older chronologically.

"The realistic person accepts (the aging process) as a natural phenomenon," says Dr. Theodore Irwin. But he adds that of all things that determine a person's age, "a birthday is the least significant."

There are men and women in their 70s and 80s who are still "young in heart" and others in their 40s who are old in both appearance and outlook.

Irwin, president of the Society of Magazine Writers, has written extensively in the health field. This latest article is called Better Health in Later Years.

It is here that he mentions the matter of the mind over the calendar, quoting an associate (not identified) that "if you don't mind, it doesn't matter."

The best preventive of degenerative changes of age is proper nutrition. Time taken to obtain, prepare, and eat nutritious foods will provide dividends in vitality and resistance to disease, the physician writes.

Your caloric needs decrease with the years because you are less active physically. It is important to cut the caloric intake, accordingly.

But cut wisely. Dr. Irwin says that one study of 800 men and women at the Age Centre of New England showed many had "reduced their intake of milk, eggs, meat and fish. . . .

"Besides proteins and iron, ascorbic acid and calcium are also most likely to be slighted."

Irwin says that at age 65, women generally need only 1,600 to 1,800 calories per day, men no more than 2,400 to 2,600.

The balanced diet should include what a person ate in earlier years, watching of course against intake of too much margarine or butter, salad oils, shortening, mayonnaise and fats generally.

The writer quotes one expert on aging to the effect, "We don't wear out, we rust out." The moral: Physical activity, the "judicious exercise" that keeps the heart, lungs and blood vessels functioning properly, should be a pattern of daily living.

It is the cumulative effect of exercises and other physical movements during the day, and every day, that counts, says Irwin.

Irwin also recommends in addition that the older person:

Quit smoking or at least cut down.

Drink alcohol only in moderation. Alcohol is bad for arthritics, inadvisable for overweight and for most cardiovascular cases, among other ailments.

Reduce intake of coffee or tea if either seems to lead to heartburn, palpitations or insomnia.

Bathe only a couple of times a week; daily baths can cause drying of the skin and itching.

A Boost In The Right Direction

Massacre of Millions Predicted if Cong Wins War

By ROBERT KAISER

SAIGON (WP) — One of the American government's leading experts on the Viet Cong has written a paper predicting that "if the Communists win decisively in South Vietnam . . . all political opposition, actual or potential, would be systematically eliminated."

The author is Leuglas Pike, who has written two books on the Vietnamese Communists and is now a United States information service officer in Tokyo. He wrote "The Vietcong strategy of terror" earlier this year. The U.S. mission here plans to release it soon.

●

Pike's work seems to be a rejoinder to those who have doubted that the Communists would wipe out opponents upon taking over South Vietnam. Pike says flatly that if the Communists win the war here ("and the key word is decisively"), the result will be "a night of the long knives" to wipe out all conceivable dissidents — perhaps 3 million people.

And, Pike contends, the massacre would go on in secret, after foreigners had been expelled from Vietnam. "The world would call it peace," Pike writes.

Citing a list of 15 categories of citizens who would be murdered, which Pike says is found often in captured documents, he notes a statement by Col. Tran Van Dac, one of the highest ranking Communists ever to defect to the Saigon regime, that "there are 3 million South Vietnamese on the blood debt list."

Pike's predictions are the most dramatic aspect of his paper, But most of it is devoted to an analysis of the Vietcong's present and past uses of terror. A major section analyzes the 1968 massacres at Hue.

In the most detailed analysis of the killings at Hue yet published, Pike writes that "despite contrary appearances, virtually no Communist killing was due to rage, frustration or panic during the Communist withdrawal" from Hue, which the Vietcong held for 24 days in February, 1968.

"Such explanations are often heard," Pike continues, "but they fail to hold up under scrutiny. Quite the contrary, to trace back any single killing is to discover that almost without exception it was the result of a decision rational and justifiable in the Communist mind."

According to Pike's analysis, the Communists changed their minds twice after seizing Hue Jan. 31, 1968. At first, Pike writes — and, he claims, captured documents show— the Vietcong expected to hold Hue for just seven days.

During that first phase, Pike says, the Vietcong purposely executed "key individuals whose elimination would greatly weaken the government's administration apparatus . . ."

After they held on more than seven days, Pike's theory continues, the Communists decided they would be able to stay in Hue indefinitely.

In this euphoric mood, he writes, the Communists set out to reconstruct Hue socially, eliminating not just specific individuals but whole categories of citizens whose existence would hinder creation of a revolutionary society. Perhaps 2,000 of the estimated 5,800 people killed at Hue were slain during this second phase, Pike suggests.

Eventually, Pike continues, the battle turned against the Communists in Hue and they realized they would have to abandon the city. This realization led to phase three, Pike writes: "Elimination of witnesses.'"

●

The entire underground Vietcong structure in Hue probably had revealed itself by this time and had to protect itself by eliminating many who later could turn them in to authorities, Pike theorizes.

For this reason, citizens taken from their homes for indoctrination had to be killed when the communists decided to flee Hue, Pike suggests.

His hypothesis about Hue, Pike writes, is "gross and at best only illustrative," but he is firm in his conclusion that the murders at Hue were committed deliberately. This finding is based on numerous interviews and the examination of captured documents and other available intelligence, he writes.

U.S. Officials Fear Cambodia May Boomerang

By MURREY MARDER

WASHINGTON (WP) — The administration revealed its concern this week that President Nixon's gamble on showing international "toughness" in Cambodia can boomerang into a dismaying display of weakness.

By hurrying a trio of its top national security planners to the Capitol to plead with Republican Senators to block any move to tie the president's hands, Mr. Nixon conceded his strategic dilemma.

Despite the public claim that U.S. forces were sent into Cambodia to counter a new and immediate Communist threat to American troops in South Vietnam, almost the reverse was true, informed sources privately concede.

OPPORTUNITY

The primary U.S. motivation was to exploit what the administration saw as a military opportunity. It was regarded, authoritative administration sources have confirmed, as a rare opportunity to strike unexpectedly at the strategically exposed Communist sanctuaries, to show Hanoi and other Communist capitals that the United States has the capacity to act thoroughly and unpredictably.

Defence Secretary Melvin R. Laird virtually confirmed that Thursday at a breakfast meeting with newsmen. In mid-April, he said, the military situation suddenly changed, and "we found the (Vietnamese Communist) forces facing in the opposite direction and moving away." The "threat was reduced" for U.S. troops entering Cambodia, said Laird, and that changed his opinion about the risks of the venture.

Many of the Communist forces had turned "in the opposite direction" because their supply lines were being threatened by the government of Cambodian Premier Lon Nol.

CLANDESTINE

Even though the Cambodian army is weak, their harassment of Communist supply lines on the western flank of the sanctuary areas, and South Vietnamese thrusts from the eastern flank with clandestine U.S. support, put the Communist forces in a precarious strategic position. That was a major reason why President Nixon chose the moment to strike.

But what caused the greatest alarm among the opponents of the president's decision is the consequent domestic risk that the administration now faces.

STABILITY

In the president's April 20 speech, he boasted, with considerable justification at that point, that he had outwitted Hanoi's strategists on a key point.

Said the president proudly, on April 20: "They thought they could win politically in the United States. This proved to be their most fatal miscalculation."

But by his decision of April 30 to intervene in Cambodia, which altered fundamental U.S. military, diplomatic and political strategy, the president put on the gambling table everything he had gained on the Southeast Asian struggle in his previous 16 months in office. Domestically, he was risking exactly what he said he had proved he could win — enough political stability in the United States to confound Hanoi's strategy.

The president, on April 30, said he carefully calculated that risk too. Others are convinced he miscalculated, badly.

the fab-a-log story

Real logs make buildings which are not only rustic and charming but also — because they do not require any insulation—warm in the winter and comfortably cool in the summer. They are truly for all seasons.
Fab-a-log makes it possible for you to have just such a structure by using pre-cut logs—each one a magnificent lodgepole pine that retains its individual rugged character.
Shaped with precision machinery to ensure perfectly fitting, weather-tight construction that requires no nails, bolts or screws, every single log is uniquely notched by a patented process which provides for permanence, stability and ease of erection. Maybe you have a cosy one-room cabin with a fireplace in mind, or perhaps your needs run to six or twelve of them. You may want a chalet to accommodate all your friends or something even larger. The possibilities with Fab-a-log are almost limitless.

ESKIMO TROUPE TO PERFORM HERE

A troupe of Eskimo dancers from the Eastern Arctic will visit and perform in Victoria on May 28, 29 and 30.

The troupe, 28 in number and mostly girls, are returning a Easter visit made by Reynolds Secondary school band to Churchill, Man. and nearby settlements.

The troupe will perform at Reynolds and Lansdowne Junior high schools on May 28.

On the following day they will visit Government House, attend a B.C. Government luncheon, visit the legislative buildings and Provincial Museum.

Members of the IODE, who are actively engaged in Eskimo work, will be in charge of the tours.

On Friday, May 30, the troupe will perform the ballet Aksaliyak at the Newcombe Auditorium, starting at 8 p.m.

Helene Gagne of Churchill, recreational co-ordinator for the government of the Northwest Territories, said the ballet is a "sort of philosophical essay of the north."

Sounds heard in the barren lands, such as the wind and sea are used," she said.

Phil Gives TV Show Triple 'A' Rating

VANCOUVER (CP) — Provincial Welfare Minister Phil Gaglardi Friday praised New York construction workers who last week waded into a peace demonstration swinging hard hats and clubs.

"It was the best television program I have seen for a long time," Gaglardi said. "It did my heart good. Those construction workers said: 'We have something to say, too,' and man they said it."

Gaglardi was speaking at the opening of the 24th annual conference of the Northwest Auto Dealers Parts and Service Managers' Association.

He said in an interview after the speech that he was not sanctioning vigilante action or violence against demonstrators.

"It's just that we are not going to allow the dissenters to change the whole thing. They are not the pacesetters," he said. "We have a way of life and it's a good way.

"Too many of the good people, the sensible people, don't let their voices be heard."

Gaglardi said he believes the establishment should continue to listen to young people when they dissent.

"I'll continue to listen," he said. "I'm a young people's worker."

He told the meeting dissent is a greater threat to society than is the state of the economy, which he said is in a slump but is not in serious trouble.

"As human beings, we should stop being so wishy-washy," he said. "We have to have the guts to face our own problems. . . .

"Young people today have life too easy and they are dissenting and we stupid adults are letting them do it without having our say."

He said the "silent majority" doesn't have to say anything, but its members should be willing to stand up and be counted when they are needed.

Soviet Docs Mend Bones With Sound

Prof. Mstislav Volkov, director of Moscow's Central Institute of Traumatology and Orthopedy, said in an interview with the Communist party newspaper Pravda Friday that the ultra-sound technique had been used in dozens of such operations and the results are encouraging.

It also has been established that ultra-sound can be used as a pain-killer during surgery and patients felt no pain a day after an operation, Volkov said.

Drunk Drivers Star in Films

SEATTLE (AP) — Police here soon will star drunk drivers in the movies to try to reduce traffic accidents involving heavy imbibers by letting them see how drunk they were.

The one-year pilot program is possible under a staff law which went into effect this week. The legislation allows police to make video-sound recordings while interviewing persons arrested for driving while intoxicated.

'When the defendant later sees a taped picture of his condition, the impact is tremendous," said Sgt. Al Rasmussen of the Seattle police planning and research section.

Officers expect more guilty pleas and don't expect to have to spend as much time in court for drunk-driving cases once the program is started, Rasmussen said.

The films have not been approved as court evidence.

45-Day Term For Disturber

A veteran of frequent appearances before Judge William Ostler, Frank Peter Ellis, 51, of Victoria, was sentenced to 45 days in jail Friday after he pleaded guilty to a charge of causing a disturbance by being drunk.

"I don't know of anyone," said Ostler," who has had more consideration from this court and has tried its patience so much."

Court was told Ellis had numerous convictions on similar charges this year, two of which have occured in less than a month.

Larry Howard Caton, Malahat Drive, convicted April of refusing to take a compulsory breathalyzer test and fined $250, was given an extension for payment of the fine by Magistrate Ostler because he has been locked out of his job for three months.

Caton said he had been unable to start the $50 per month payments May 1 as required because he had no job and little money.

"I would rather pay for it than do time (one month in jail)," he said.

"No one wants to take advantage of your misfortune," said Ostler, giving him until June 15 to make the first payment.

Crowds Gather For Pop Festival

By STEVE HUME
Times Staff

MISSION — Early arrivals at the Strawberry Mountain Fair Pop Festival nine miles east of this lower mainland town looked like a medieval army encampment early this morning.

Although promoters asked fairgoers not to arrive before 9 a.m., lineups at the gate were more than a mile long Friday night at midnight.

Cars were arriving from all over the western United States and Canada.

Within hours the isolated 50-acre tract of land set aside for the two-day festival which ends Sunday night had become a tent city.

There was a rag-tag atmosphere about the encampment as long-haired youths pitched colorful tents, made lean-tos, built fires and planted banners almost like regimental colors.

This is where rock groups like Country Joe and the Fish, the Collectors and Spring will perform today and tomorrow.

Supporting the army of young people is a sophisticated complex of boutiques and food concessions, But even they do not appear to be able to handle the advance guard of an expected 30,000.

At 7 this morning lineups at hotdog stands were already 30 and 40 deep.

And on a dusty road that leads in from the Lougheed Highway lineups of cars were beginning to back up again.

Although no formal performances were scheduled Friday night promoters made their sound equipment available to which ever musicians wished to use it and spontaneous jam sessions sent chords of rock music echoing off the nearby mountains.

It went on until the early morning hours.

People who were not mingling freely in front of the stage were grouped around campfires that dotted the area.

Fairgoers included straight-looking American kids from Seattle who had driven up in their Camarros and mustangs, long-haired youngsters in motley attire who had hitch-hiked out from Vancouver and two or three Vancouver motorcycle gangs complete with iron crosses and chopped-down motorcycles.

At least one motorcycle group was assisting promoters in controlling and directing traffic.

RCMP who were in evidence at the entrance to the fairgrounds and assisted with traffic control Friday night made no move to enter the grounds.

It was almost as though a moratorium had been declared on drug use for the two days.

Dope dealers wandered through the crowd offering hashish and marijuana. Early this morning sales didn't seem to be going so well.

"The police only get heavy when they outnumber you. Unless they intend to bring in every policeman in the province there's no way they are going to bust anybody for dope at this fair," said one young man from Victoria who hitchiked over Friday night.

Although bright sunshine and soaring temperatures promised fine weather, there was almost a sense of boredom with the whole thing.

It was as though everybody had been to a rock festival once too often.

The fair itself was dedicated to a respect for ecology, but this morning graders were knocking down more trees and digging up more green grass to make parking spaces for the thousands of cars arriving.

Drapeau Hails Choice Of Montreal

MONTREAL (CP — Looking drawn and tired, Mayor Jean Drapeau returned from Amsterdam Friday and said the awarding of the 1976 Summer Olympics to Montreal "is a tremendous compliment to every Canadian from coast to coast."

Speaking to reporters after alighting from a commercial jet sporting an Olympic flag above its cockpit, Mr. Drapeau said:

"The International Olympic Committee's decision was a recognition of what Canada has done in the past, and can do in the future, for the sake of world fraternity and peace."

His reception at Montreal International Airport was warm and enthusiastic. A Marching band and an estimated 400 youngsters waving placards and flags blocked his route from the plane to the terminal.

The Games were awarded to Montreal Tuesday in Amsterdam.

While calling for the support of all Canadians, the mayor repeated his claim that Montreal will neither ask or need a "special" grant from the federal government to stage the Games.

Federal support would be sought for the planned Olympic Village which is to be converted into low-cost housing units after the Games are over.

Oil Research Aided

ALGIERS (Reuters) — Russian experts will help Algeria conduct research aimed at boosting its yearly oil production to 100,000,000 tons from the present 43,000,000. A contract signed here Friday night is between the Soviet Techno-export organization and the Algerian state oil and gas company, Sonatrach.

Island Trains Backed by AVIM

It also urged that the departure point be changed, from Victoria to an unnamed upper Island point.

The resolution was adopted without discussion by the 37 delegates attending the afternoon session of the day-long annual convention at Oak Bay municipal hall.

The dayliner passenger service, run by Canadian Pacific's subsidiary E and N Railway, is threatened with closure. CPR has applied to federal authorities to drop passenger service because it is uneconomical.

DUNCAN SPONSOR

The resolution presented to AVIM, sponsored by Duncan, said it is the opinion of many communities that the railway operation "as presently operated" is not sufficiently competitive but could be an asset and of valuable service.

The association will petition both CPR and the Canadian Transport Commission.

Delegates approved a resolution endorsing federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis' suggestion that Georgia Strait be designated a national park to maintain it as a recreation area free from pollution of industrial development.

Oak Bay Ald. Douglas Watts was opposed, saying implications had not been thought out and describing it as a "motherhood" resolution.

Part of the sea off Oak Bay had been incorporated into the municipality so it could regulate speed boats.

"If we endorse this resolution we'd be saying this is federal property," he said. "We have not listened in any way to the provincial government."

Because municipalities run sewage outfalls into the strait, the federal government would insist on its pollution standards, in addition to B.C. ones, so there would be an escalation of administration and confusion.

"Will the frequency of ferry service depend on the federal parks department," he wondered.

LUCK IMPROVES

Watts had better luck in attacking a Duncan resolution which sought to petition the provincial government to levy a surtax on raw materials in an amount sufficient to remove all costs of hospitalization, education and social welfare from property taxes.

He said it was a "poorly thought out resolution." If such a proposal is to be made, it must be sound and not cripple exports. Other delegates agreed and the resolution was defeated.

In other resolutions, delegates agreed:

- To ask the provincial government to amend legislation to permit acquisition of regional trails;
- To ask the provincial government to provide legislation to anable regional districts to take on the function of conservation programs;
- To urge the provincial government to proclaim legislation to enable regional beverage containers.

Next year's meeting will be held in North Cowichan.

CAPITAL SCENE

The Greater Victoria Association on Alcoholism will hold its annual meeting and election of officers Wednesday, May 20, in the First United Church. Dr. H. L. Kemke will discuss the problems of alcoholism.

The Administrative Management Society will hold its annual meeting and election of officers Tuesday, May 19, at Holyrood House, 5:30 p.m.

The Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce board of directors will be meeting in the Charlotte and Albert Room, Empress Hotel, Friday, May 22 at noon.

The Medical Office Assistants Association of Southern Vancouver Island will meet in the Royal Jubilee Hospital lecture room Wednesday, May 20 at 8:15 p.m. Dr. L. N. Roberts will be guest speaker.

Dust Flies Off Revered School Play

The scene is a squalid courtyard in a Mexican Villa and the characters include a number of unshaven revolutionaries festooned with bandoliers, muttering under their sombreros.

That's something like the scene Shawnigan Lake School is using instead of the Roman senate for their Latinized version of Shakespeare's Julius Caesar — renamed "Julio Cesar."

Says a school press release: "Textural changes have been minimal: the change has been made to bring out the universality of ideas with which the play deals as well as to blow the dust off one of the more revered school texts."

The 100-member cast from Shawnigan Lake School and Strathcona Lodge School brings the production into Victoria May 20 and 21 for presentation at the McPherson Playhouse.

Six Killed On Eve Of Election

SANTO DOMINGO (Reuters) — Six persons were killed and at least 10 wounded in isloated acts of terrorism in the Dominican Republic on the eve of today's general election.

Two soldiers, two policemen and two civilians were shot dead in various parts of the country for political motives.

The victims brought the death toll to at least 66 since the election campaign began three months ago.

Observers did not expect polling to be affected by any large-scale disturbances, although sporadic violence was likely.

About 1,500,000 voters are expected to choose between incumbent President Joaquin Balaguer and four challengers, Balaguer is heavliy favored for re-election.

The first election campaign since the withdrawal of the U.S. and Latin American occupation force in 1966 officially ended Friday and all political activities were prohibited until after the polls close.

Mercury Forces Fish Bans

QUEBEC (CP) — Commercial fishing will be banned starting at midnight Sunday night on the Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers between Hull and Trois-Rivieres, Que., because of mercury pollution, it was announced Friday.

A government statement said the decision was taken following analyses undertaken jointly by the federal government and the provincial department of tourism, fish and game.

Hull is opposite Ottawa on the Ottawa River and Trois-Rivieres is 90 miles downstream from Montreal on the St. Lawrence.

Although the ban does not extend to sport fishing, the government recommended caution in eating fish taken in sport fishing in the affected waters.

Regular analyses of the water were to continue.

Berliners Go East for Pentecost

BERLIN (AP) — West Germans, but not West Berliners, will pour into East Berlin this weekend for family reunions on the Pentecost holiday.

The West Germans are allowed to go through the Berlin Wall, but West Berliners are barred. For four years, West Berliners as a group have been shut out because of West Berlin's refusal to recognize East Germany.

Labine Found Priceless Uranium

By BOB BOWMAN

Control of Canadian uranium resources has been much in the news recently. Today is the anniversary of Gilbert Labine's discovery of uranium at Great Bear Lake on May 16, 1930. It was one of the most valuable mining discoveries in mining history. Gold was worth $35 an ounce, but radium, obtained from uranium, was then worth approximately $3,000 an ounce!

Until the time of Labine's discovery practically all uranium came from the Belgian Congo and sold for $70,000 an ounce. The price dropped to $25,000 an ounce when the Labines built a refinery at Port Hope, Ontario, to process the uranium from Great Bear Lake.

Of course uranium made possible the development of atomic energy, perhaps a mixed blessing; but Labine's discovery increased the supply of radium for medical treatment, and he was awarded the Curie Medal in 1938, his most prized possession.

Gilbert Labine was brought up in Westmeath, Ottawa Valley, in humble circumstances, and he and his brother Charles left school to become prospectors when their father died. While they were in the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway region Gilbert studied mineralogy at Haileybury Mining Institute. It was there that he first saw a sample of pitchblende, from which uranium is obtained, and he did not forget it.

Later Labine found gold in Manitoba, and named his mine "Eldorado," but the ore was too low grade to be profitable. He had been studying reports by Dr. Mackintosh Bell and Charles Camsell when they made a geological survey of Great Bear Lake in 1900 and came to the conclusion that there might be uranium there. Labine hired the famous bush pilot Punch Dickens to fly him in with an assistant, Charles St. Paul. First they found traces of silver, then cobalt, and on May 16, 1930, the great discovery of pitchblende.

Labine only had enough money to fly to Great Bear Lake, but had made a rendezvous with brother Charles to come for him by canoe.

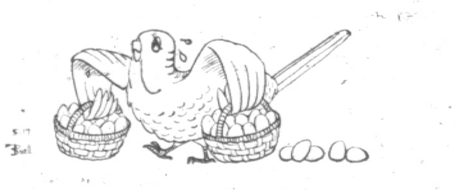
The Wonderful World of Animals



By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Bessie, my parakeet, is at it again this spring. Laying eggs, that is. It's such a ridiculous thing to do, as I see it. She's never even seen a male bird, let alone mated with one. (I've finally found a use for her eggs, though. I give them to a friend who loves eggs but is on a low cholesterol diet). My concern is to keep her from getting egg-bound as she did last year. Is there something I can give her to prevent this?—F.B.

DEAR F.B.: Proper nutrition has a bearing on preventing an egg-bound condition. Of course, adequate protein, vitamins, calcium and trace minerals should be in the diet long before the laying process begins. Depending upon her condition at this time, the doctor might advise aborting the present process entirely, with the aid of injectable hormones.

DEAR DR. MILLER: The Welsh corgi is my kind of dog. I've never known a smarter, more enjoyable companion. But recently I had to have my Corgi put to sleep because a slipped disc resulted in a paralysis which proved incurable, in spite of surgery. I'm now haunted by the fear the new corgi puppy I've ordered may some day suffer the same fare. I understand this is a cross all long-backed dogs must bear. What can I do to keep this from happening to my next one?—B.X.

DEAR B.X.: Basically the problem is one of providing maximum nutrition; and support, to the problem-prone spine. High quality protein plus other nutrients are musts. Then the basic ingredients including, of course, water and oxygen, must be carried in adequate quantities to all parts of the spine, including the disc areas. Obviously this can only be done if there is an adequate network of terminal blood capillaries reaching these areas. The spinal column's own strength, plus that of adjacent muscles, determines the spine's susceptibility to war, stress and trauma. Well-toned, firm spinal muscle support is vital for the long-backed dog. This requires sufficient daily exercise, some of it vigorous, to keep these muscles in top shape. Such a dog automatically has the circulation to supply daily needs for bone, cartilage and muscle. Unfortunately, those long-backed dogs who need this kind of regimen the most seldom get it. A sedate stroll around the block just doesn't do it, even for the dog kept in good shape as far as weight is concerned.

DEAR DR. MILLER: I've discovered my young rat, Snoopy, has a sweet tooth. His favorite treat is caramels and he makes the funniest faces getting it stuck and then unstuck from his mouth. If I just gave him a little every day and the rest of his diet was made for rats, would the little candy hurt him?—C.C.

DEAR C.C.: While it may not hurt him much otherwise, Snoopy's sweet teeth would tend to fall out considerably sooner. A rat is susceptible to cavities, but if fed on a carbohydrate-free diet, Snoopy wouldn't get any cavities at all. Cavities develop at a rate proportionate to the length of time the carbohydrate remains in the mouth. If Snoopy drank his sweets, it would remain in the mouth a comparatively short time, causing fewer repercussions. But chomping on caramel—or trying to — assures prolonged periods when the mouth contains a high percentage of sugar. This would accelerate tooth decay and Snoopy's rate of "fall out."

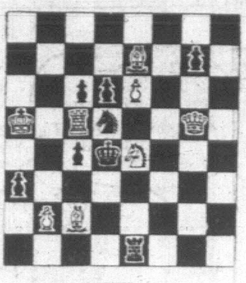
PROBLEM
By Dr. E. Bachl, Germany
BLACK: 6



WHITE: 8

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

A chess reporter at a major tournament tends to be like the frantic owner of a burning house, trying to save anything and everything before it is lost. My notes from the recent explosion of chess in Yugoslavia bear this out. They are a strange and jumbled mixture of trivia and consequence. Here's a scribbled observation: "What's happened to Bobby (Fischer)? He used to be a natty dresser, but here he is today in Levis with his shirt hanging out ... but he still leans over the board like the Fischer of old, with his head in his hands when it's his turn to play." Or "Erfim Geller looks like a mean farmer, but he's really a kind-hearted soul. He never stops smoking. Yesterday I saw him with three cigarettes going at once." Then an observation of wise old Dr. Max Euwe, captain of the World Team: "Larsen and Fischer, the two enfants terribles of chess, will never become world champions."

I have a whole set of prize-winning games and notes from the tournament and a special report on the smashing victory Bobby won at a rapid transit tournament against ten other Grandmasters and an international master, this held at Herceq Novi, a beautiful place on the Adriatic coast not far from Dubrovnik. With this great grab bag, it is really hard to choose the stuff of a column, but for this one, let's take an exclusive interview I was lucky enough to get with Fischer and Dimitri Postnikov, captain of the USSR team.

Bobby was asked:

"What about your opponent, Petrosian?" (Bobby beat him 3-1).

"He was not in good form, but neither was I. After all, I haven't played in a year and a half — and I feel it."

"Do you regret not having played (World Champion) Spassky?"

"No, because I beat Petrosian." (In another interview, Bobby gave an opposite answer to this query.)

Postnikov was asked whether he saw any possibility of a Spassky-Fischer match in the near future, even an unofficial one.

His reply: "No. Spassky, in losing, even if it were an unofficial match, would lose everything. Fischer in losing would lose nothing. Everybody wants to play Spassky. Don't you think we have plenty of masters in our own country who would jump at the opportunity to play against the World Champion? Petrosian would like nothing better. But that would not be right ... Spassky says that if he were to play such a match, the formula FIDE now has of playing zonal and interzonals to find a challenger to the title would have no value. He does not plan to go over FIDE's head."

Back to Bobby.

"What do you think of Spassky's strength?"

"He is a very strong player, but he made many mistakes in his match against Petrosian for the title. Here, too, he blundered against Larsen in the third game. True, it could happen to anyone. Chess has become a very tough game nowadays."

"Why did you give the first board to Larsen?" (Thus giving up a chance to beat the World Champion, Spassky).

"I know that I am better than he is, but it was fair to give him first board because he played in so many tournaments and he won most of them, while I haven't played at all for so long."

"Who are the best players in the world today?"

"Spassky, Petrosian, Korchnoi, Larsen and me."

"What's the future of chess?"

NO MORE SUBMARINE CABLES

Island Power Plant Decision Draws Near

By NEILL GADDES

The decision to build a thermal power plant, quite possibly a nuclear one, to be in operation by 1976 on southern Vancouver Island, could be made this summer.

This is the feeling of B.C. Hydro Chairman Gordon Shrum, interviewed in Vancouver last week.

Shrum said Hydro did not intend putting any more submarine cables across from the mainland. Submarine cables were not a satisfactory method of meeting future power requirements. And with no more hydro sites on the Island that could be developed economically, building thermal-energy plants is the alternative.

★ ★ ★

A thermal-energy power plant, Shrum said, could be fueled by either coal, oil, gas or atomic power.

"We have just appropriated $160,000 to make a study as to how we are going to meet the energy requirements for Vancouver Island."

Shrum said the study, expected to be complete within two months, is intensive rather than long-term and will deal primarily with thermal production processes.

When the study is available, with its recommendations of the best methods of producing energy, Hydro will advise the provincial government.

Shrum said the decision on thermal development should be made this year, possibly this summer, but would probably depend on labor conditions in the province.

The shift of the provincial government towards thermal-energy production, particularly nuclear-powered plants, came in February of this year when Premier Bennett announced in the legislature that he had asked Ottawa to help build an atomic plant at Duncan.

This seemingly ended a three-year running debate between Resources Minister Ray Williston on one side and Shrum and former Hydro co-chairman Dr. Hugh Keenleyside involving comparative costs of hydro and nuclear plants.

The difference of opinion dates back to late 1966 and early 1967 when Shrum and Keenlyside were quoted as saying that B.C. would not likely develop any more major hydro-electric projects after the Peace and Columbia were completed. Instead, they urged construction of the first nuclear plant for southern Vancouver Island.

A firm decision between a new hydro giant and atomic power had to be made no later than 1972, Keenleyside said, preferably earlier.

Williston disagreed, saying that the Island's needs would be met by more submarine cables or expansion of the Jordan River plant and new hydro plants on northern Island rivers.

At present, about 50 percent of the Island's power comes from the mainland by submarine cable although this figure varies with power requirements which are heavier in the winter than in the summer.

The four cables that come from Tswassassen, thread their way through the Gulf Islands and land on the Island near Maple Bay. Two are AC circuits producing 240,000 kilowatts and the other two are DC circuits of 312,000 kilowatts.

Bennett's decision to seek federal government assistance was most likely dictated by the rapid rise in capital costs which hampered his earlier argument that hydro-electric plants would provide lower operating costs if the dams were big enough to achieve economies of scale in capital costs.

Shrum said, of the expected report, that he didn't think there would be recommendation for a gas plant since there is no natural gas on the Island and gas shipment would be expensive.

If the recommendations are for a nuclear plant, Hydro would go to the provincial government and say Ottawa should be interested enough in this to pay the difference between the nuclear and thermal costs.

★ ★ ★

"We don't want to increase our borrowing if we can help it. We had our borrowing increased $250 million at the last session of the legislature. And the rate at which we have to spend money in the next five years that isn't going to last us very long."

As yet, location of the thermal plant is not final although, when Bennett made his announcement in February, Duncan was mentioned as a possibility.

If the thermal plant is to be nuclear there is no problem, Shrum said, in disposing the heat from the process when the plant is located on the ocean.

"If you were up in the interior and you had a small lake or river this disposition of the heat would be something of concern."

Any assistance from Ottawa for the construction of a nuclear power plant would mean the plant would be of the heavy-water variety.

Heavy water is used as a coolant in nuclear reactors and is made by concentrating the deuterium found in minute quantities in all water.

Ordinary water is composed of two parts hydrogen and one part oxygen while heavy water is composed of two parts deuterium and one part oxygen. There are plants producing or being built to produce heavy water in Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec.

With a nuclear plant, Shrum said, the problems of pollution are greatly reduced as there is no effluent produced.

If a coal-burning plant was built and designed to effectively control all aspects of pollution, there would still be carbon dioxide produced in developing energy.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

A Sermon on Sermons

By Rev. J. A. DAVIDSON

Many years ago an eminent Scottish preacher, Dr. Norman Macleod, prefaced a sermon with this little prayer: "O Lord, teach us to remember that for every sermon we hear we must render an account at the Day of Judgment."

Preachers, of course, should render account for all the sermon they preach — and that ought to keep us preachers properly humble about our performance. But is it fair to suggest that hearers of sermons are also somehow accountable?

Many of you never listen to sermons — and so there is no hook here which you have to get off. And most of you who do hear sermonds prpbably feel that it is all the preacher's responsibility and that is a sermon fails it's all his fault.

FOUR HINTS

It is probably terribly presumptuous for me to do this, but I am now going to give four hints on listening to sermons, which I hope will help put this matter into a realistic perspective.

First: Try to understand the nature and purpose of Christian preaching. By New Testament and traditional standards, a sermon is not merely an edifying chat or lecture which may or may not be helpful in some way to its hearers:

A sermon is essentially a proclamation of the Gospel message and an exercise in clarifying and stimulating faith and pointing up its practical implications. It should, of course, be relevant to the concerns of life today — but it must be rooted in biblical faith.

You may have other standards for judging sermons — but this one is fundamental.

Second: The sermon is itself an act of worship and not merely an accessory to worship, not simply the Big Number (or the Boring Interlude, as your taste decides) put into a setting of prayers and readings and music.

BRAVO NOT NEEDED

But a sermon is not a performance or oratorical display. An effective sermon, an authentic sermon, is not one which impels its hearers to exclaim, "What a splendid preacher!"

Rather, it is one which leads its hearers to prayer and self-dedication, to renewed determination to serve the Christian cause in the world.

Third: Carefully examine your conscience before you critically slice up a sermon and its preacher. I would not challenge the pew-sitter's right to criticize sermons: that little game can add an element of jollity to Sunday luncheons.

And we preachers do deserve much criticism. But you hearers must not assume every time you don't like a sermon, or certain features of it, that the preacher has failed.

Christian preaching will sometimes have a directness and a demandingness which are not pleasing to comfortable, self-satisfied people. There is challenge as well as comfort in the Gospel, and the faithful preacher will sound both notes.

CHECK YOURSELF

We preachers are often incompetent and ill-informed and arrogant — but before you decide that on a particular occasion those afflictions have been shown by your preacher, take a clear look into the depths of your own conscience.

My fourth and final hint is this: When listening to a sermon keep one ear at least sensitive to the divine echoes. I am not suggesting that the clergy have special communication facilities with heaven, that God endows preachers with supernatural wisdom.

The point I would make here is that God can get through to you in a sermon despite the ineptness and the prejudice and the folly of the preacher. Listen for the echoes in a sermon: they are probably more significant that the preacher's direct statements.

Priest Wants Passion Play Revised

OBERAMMERGAU (AP) — Julius Doepfner, archbishop of Munich, marked the opening today of a controversial Passion Play by calling anew for a revision of the text to bring it in tune with the times.

Speaking at a sunrise service in the 230-year-old church in this West German village, the cardinal also took issue with charges that the play was anti-Semitic.

Calling for a revision when the next Passion Play is staged in 1980, the cardinal said the text should bring out more clearly that the Jews bear no collective guilt for Christ's death and those depicted in the story of Christ's Passion represent all of mankind.

Arabs Say CBC Biased

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — The Canadian Arab Federation opened a three day conference here Friday claiming the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is biased in its coverage of the Middle-East situation.

Ali Jabara of London, convention chairman, said the CBC has consistently taken the side of Israel in its coverage because of the influence of Zionists in the organization.

Dr. George Haggar of Toronto said the federation is against anti-semitism but must join forces to combat Zionism and promote the Arab cause.

CO-OPERATE IN TRAINING SAYS VATICAN

VATICAN CITY (AP) — In a Christian unity move, the Vatican said Friday that Roman Catholics and Protestants should co-operate in the training of priests and ministers.

The cardinal, as head of the Vatican's Christian Unity Secretariat, is the Vatican's top authority on the efforts to bring the Roman Catholic and other Christian churches closer together.

The Vatican urged "a shared use of books and libraries." It also called for the "cutting down of useless or duplicated courses."

Pope Paul Lashes Belgian Cardinal

VATICAN CITY (AP)—Pope Paul lashed out Friday at Belgium's Leo Cardinal Suenens and others who have accused him of running the Roman Catholic Church in an authoritarian manner.

The 72-year-old pontiff said he received the criticism with "sorrowful amazement."

In an interview with the Paris newspaper Le Monde May 12, he suggested that this papal stand ignored the principles of collective decision-making laid down by the 1962-'65 Vatican ecumenical council.

"We take great account of the council as a precious gift of the Holy Spirit," Pope Paul retorted in a speech to the central committee of the world bishops' synod.

Without mentioning Cardinal Suenens by name, the Pope said: "Contrary to what has been said in these days, to our sorrowful amazement, we try to be respectful toward the collegiality sharing of authority of the bishops."

The Pope said the Belgian prelate's remarks "do not seem to conform to the brotherly style urged by collegiality itself nor to the nature or the gravity of the problems which . . . are being studied by responsible and competent authorities."

Y BACK-SLIDES

OTTAWA (CP) — The national president of the Young Men's Christian Association wants "the over-50s, like myself," to give up control of the organization.

In his retiring statement to the organization, released Thursday, John J. Carson says that despite the apparent success of the movement, "we seem to be back-sliding in our primary purpose of working with young people."

He noted that in 1948 the age group from 18 to 29 comprised more than one-third of the Y's membership. By 1968 it had dropped to one-quarter.

"The only effective course of action is giving our young people a real voice in the decision-making process of this movement."

SHOOTINGS TRIGGER UNREST

Campuses Seething

By The Associated Press

The shooting deaths of two young Negro students on the Jackson State College campus in Mississippi have provoked new protests on some campuses across the United States.

About 20 educational institutions were officially closed and a student strike information centre at Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass., reported student strikes at 282 of the country's 1,500 colleges and universities.

The student strikes and demonstrations began nearly two weeks ago to protest President Nixon's decision to send Amercian combat troops into Cambodia. Later, the demonstrations expanded to include protests against the killing of four white Kent State University students during a confrontation with Ohio National Guard troops, the slayings of six Negroes in Augusta, Ga., and the shooting deaths of the two Negro students at Jackson State.

Many students have begun turning away from the demonstrations and seeking ways of influencing Americans outside the academic community.

SEND LETTERS TO NIXON

Students at the University of Southern California, which has 17,500 students, sent letters bearing 50,000 signatures to the White House protesting the war.

ELECTRIFYING NEWS ON ISLAND PLANT

Despite the near monomania the British Columbia government has displayed in its approach to hydro development — the Peace and Columbia have been electrifying election battle cries — it is apparent that what some have called "too much" is not enough.

Now a new form of electric production must be found and the thought of a nuclear reactor on a quiet Vancouver Island bay is giving some people the willies.

Israeli Jets Sink Egyptian Warships

TEL AVIV (Reuters) — Israeli air force jets today sank an Egyptian destroyer and a missile boat at their moorings in the Red Sea, an army spokesman said.

In other action, two Egyptian MiG-17 jets were shot down by Israeli jets in dogfights over the Suez canal.

The spokesman said the Egyptian aircraft were intercepted when they attempted to attack Israeli positions along the canal's southern sector.

No casualties were inflicted to Israeli forces and all Israeli planes returned safely to base, he said. One of the Egyptian pilots was seen bailing out, he added.

The two planes downed today brought to seven the number of Egyptian aircraft shot down by Israel in the last 48 hours—and to 121 the total of Arab planes downed since the end of the six-day war in 1967, a military spokesman said.

CONFLICT HEATS UP

The Middle East conflict heated up along the canal Friday, while Secretary-General U Thant of the United Nations was reported under growing pressure to reactivate the UN peace mission to the troubled area.

NAMED CHAIRMAN of the Commons environmental pollution committee is David Anderson, MP for Esquimalt-Saanich. Anderson brought pressure to bear for formation of committee and, in unusual honor for a freshmen MP, committee members selected him to head it. Vice-chairman is Phil Givens, the outspoken former mayor of Toronto.

Tories Scolded For 'Unconcern'

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The Conservatives came under renewed criticism from Finance Minister Edgar Benson Friday for being unconcerned about the rise of inflation in Canada.

He said in the Commons the Conservative stand on inflation today is in "sharp contrast to their position of only a few months ago." Opposition parties had lost sight of the fact that Canadians were concerned about rising prices.

Benson was speaking during debate on a Conservative motion calling on the government to change economic policies said to be leading to growing unemployment.

George Valade (PC—Montreal-Ste. Marie), who moved the motion, said the government is "criminally responsible" for the social problems created by unemployment. Government policies throwing Canadians out of work had to be changed.

Benson said the "most intemperate criticism" of the government's policies came from the Conservatives who were in power during the worst postwar period of unemployment.

He slapped labor on the wrist for "declining to cooperate" with the prices and incomes commission in the fight against inflation.

The government was staying with its policy. He said he had "considerable confidence the Canadian people have enough good sense to understand why the government must continue to pursue what is not a hard and difficult course."

War Protest Planned by GIs

By The Associated Press

Observanced for armed Forces Day today were cancelled by some military bases across the United States after announcements of planned demonstrations described by peace groups as "the first nationwide GI anti-war protest."

A defence department spokesman said, however, that he knew of no plans to cancel Armed Forces Day speeches by about 50 civilians and military defence officials. He said at least 22 local base commanders had cancelled military participation in parades and other observances.

The "GI Task Force" of the New Mobilization Committee To End the War in Vietnam announced that GIs at 22 military bases would stage anti-war protests in connection with Armed Forces Day. The announcement said anti-war organizations at 43 military installations would participate.

Fort Bragg, N.C. and adjoining Pope Air Force Base, cancelled programs open to the public today. Earlier, GI's United, an organization of anti-war soldiers, had scheduled a peace rally at Fort Bragg and announced that actress Jane Fonda, an anti-war activist, would join them.

GO ON AS SCHEDULED

Fort Hood, near Killeen, Tex., announced that Armed Forces Day celebrations would go on as scheduled despite a peace march planned by the May 16 Committee. The committee said its membership includes 1,000 Fort Hood soldiers.

Col. Bill G. Smith, assistant commandant of the U.S. Aviation School at Fort Rucker, Ala., said Armed Forces Day activities at the base had been cancelled in the face of "continued tensions and unrest throughout the country and specific threats of violence at Fort Rucker."

He said the threats included "bomb threats against personnel, facilities and aircraft." The cancellation, he said, was designed "to ensure the safety of personnel of this area and to deny to those who would use our hospitality as an opportunity to disrupt the tranquillity we enjoy."

Brig.-Gen. Howard H. Cooksey, commanding general of Fort Dix, N.J., cancelled observanced because of possible danger to the public, from a scheduled anti-war protest by several thousand persons.

Rear-Admiral H. A. Renke, commandant of the 9th Naval District, said the U.S. Great Lakes Naval base north of Chicago was forced to cancel observances because of an anti-war rally expected to draw 5,000 persons.

Strike Delays Border Traffic

By The Canadian Press

Traffic at three United States-Canada border crossing points in Ontario continued to be delayed today as supervisory personnel filled in for customs inspectors off their jobs in protest against working conditions and other issues.

Delays at the three ports of entry — Windsor, Sarnia and Fort Erie—lasted as long as 45 minutes and were expected to get worse by the end of the Victoria Day holiday when thousands of Canadian visitors to the U.S. head home.

Cambodian Key Battle Shaping

City Encircled

OUTSIDE KAMPONG CHAM (AP)—Viet Cong and North Vietnamese forces today smashed into Kampong Cham, Cambodia's third largest city, while other Communist forces encircled three government battalions defending the area.

The Cambodian high command rushed reinforcements by commandeered civilian trucks and buses for what may be the biggest battle of the Cambodian war.

Up to a regiment of North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops surrounding the city were hit by repeated air strikes by American-made T-28 bombers, flown by Cambodian pilots, and by South Vietnamese bombers. Huge columns of smoke rose above the town.

"The situation is extremely grave," said a high-ranking South Vietnamese officer. "The Cambodians may not be able to hold out much longer."

U.S. BASES HIT

North Vietnamese troops launched a third successive counter-attack against American bases inside Cambodia killing five U.S. soldiers and wounding nine.

Officer in the field told Associated Press correspondent Peter Arnett it appeared the North Vietnamese were consolidating their forces and striking back after initial retreat in the face of the massive allied incursion into Cambodia.

The Communist troops hit the American defenders of the newly-built Fire Base Branch in the middle of the night with a hail of machine-gun, rocket and rifle fire.

The Americans lowered their artillery and fired point-blank at the attackers, while air force troops found the bodies of eight North Vietnamese soldiers on the barbed-wire perimeter of the base, about 90 miles inside Cambodia.

The U.S. command said the latest fighting raised American casualties to 132 killed and 506 wounded in Cambodia.

EXPECT MORE

More counter-attacks were expected by field commanders, although U.S. military spokesmen in Saigon said the allied thrusts against North Vietnamese base camps inside Cambodia have restricted the Communists' effort.

Lt.-Gen. Do Cao Tri, commander of the 3rd Corps Tactical Zone west and north of Saigon, said his troops had seized enough military equipment to arm about 60 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong battalions.

In Vietnam, waves of U.S.

Mail Plugs East Offices

By The Canadian Press

Huge backups of mail accumulated in Toronto and Montreal Friday during a work-to-rule campaign by Toronto letter carriers and a 24-hour walkout by inside workers in Montreal to back wage demands.

Disruption of mail services also occurred in Ottawa, Windsor and Sarnia in Ontario but employees in other cities appeared ready to wait for a formal strike vote to be taken Tuesday and Wednesday by the country's 27,000 postal workers.

Rallies of postmen represented by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and the letter Carriers' Union of Canada are scheduled for today or Sunday in Toronto, Kirkland Lake, Ont., Calgary and Edmonton.

The letter carriers are not scheduled to return to work until Tuesday, having both the weekend and the Victoria Day holiday Monday off.

In Montreal, the pile included about 1,000,000 letters and third-class items, 45,000 parcels, 150 bags of airmail and about 14,000 other bags waiting to be unloaded from 38 boxcars.

Montreal's inside workers returned to their jobs Friday night after joining most of the city's 1,130 letter carriers in sessions to study a conciliation board report handed down last week.

Jobless Level 'Catastrophic'

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP)—Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield accused the government today of using the unemployed of Canada to fight inflation in a policy that has no guarantee of success.

Citing the latest unemployment figures, Stanfield told the Newfoundland Progressive Conservative leadership convention that Newfoundland's figure of 14.5 per cent is "more than double a national rate that is already catastrophically high."

The Trudeau government considers that high unemployment "is a perfectly acceptable price to pay for the possibility of checking inflation," Stanfield said.

"The present government was elected by the people of this country on the promise that it would create a Just Society . . . but what could be more unjust than trying to cure the ills of society on the backs of its weakest members because—and make no mistake about it—that is exactly what this government is doing."

And yet there was no assurance that inflation would be stopped by the restrictive measures the government had adopted. Several economists had claimed their effort would be negligible.

The same restrictions were choking off the effects of its regional development program because they were applied too generally.

The least favored regions are being "squeezed by inflation and tripped up by austerity," he said.

Grand Jury Rebukes Chicago Police Over Raid on Panthers

CHICAGO (AP) — A federal grand jury has rebuked law enforcement agencies involved in a fatal raid on Black Panther party members and a subsequent investigation.

No one was indicted.

The grand jury's 252-page report, issued Friday, says the work of the police officers involved "gives some reasonable basis for public doubt of their efficiency or even of their credibility."

Two Panther leaders, Fred Hampton and Mark Clark, were killed when Negro and white police from the Illinois state attorney's office raided Hampton's apartment Dec. 4 in a search for illegal weapons.

The whole concept of the raid, the jury said, "seems ill-conceived."

The grand jury also criticized seven Panther members who survived the raid for refusing to testify at its hearings. And it had harsh words for the Black Panther party.

"The Panther tactics and policies help create much of the very tension and conflict they have complained of in this and other cases," the jury reported.

The jury was commissioned to determine whether the civil rights of the persons in Hampton's apartment had been violated.

It said it was impossible to determine whether they had been a violation of anyone's civil rights without testimony of the surviving Panther members. They refused to take the witness stand, the survivors said, because the jury was not composed of their peers.

Policemen who participated in the raid said the Panthers fired at least 10 to 15 shots at them, the jury found.

The grand jury said policemen fired 82 to 99 shots.

The police department's internal investigation division "was so seriously deficient" in investigating the behavior of the raiding policemen "that it suggests purposeful malfeasance," the jury said.

The investigations division director at the time of the inquiry, Capt. Harry Ervanian, testified that the investigation was the worst he had ever seen. He agreed with the suggestion it was a "whitewash."

Ervanian and two other high-ranking police officers were demoted Thursday.

State charges against the seven Panthers arrested in the raid were dropped a week ago. State Attorney Edward V. Hanrahan said there was not sufficient evidence to support the charges of attempted murder, armed violence and other crimes.

Rise Temporary Experts Figure

By ART JOHNSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

The bear market on Canadian stock exchanges this week may have been forced into hibernation— at least temporarily — by a sharp technical rally.

But how long the hibernation will last is a matter of speculation among observers.

Most analysts agree that a sharp advance which began Friday is temporary because the same factors which caused the plunge still prevail.

Some observers said Friday's advance was merely a long-overdue adjustment of eroded prices. The more optimistic predict an uptrend lasting perhaps a week.

They said the rally came when a substantial number of investors felt markets had bottomed out and will not move down further.

The pessimists point out that disappointing quarterly corporate earnings, the federal government's tight-money policies and political tensions in the Middle East, Vietnam and Cambodia still bear down on investors.

The rally levelled off Friday after about two hours of trading when a number of issues began to be traded at a gain of about one point.

Observers said some investors were anxious to make a slight gain and get out of the market.

However, the rally built up momentum and markets closed with a sharp gain.

Throughout the week, markets showed a great resistance to good news.

Contract Awarded

OTTAWA (CP) — A $591,085 federal contract for widening the Sans Sault Rapids navigation channel on the Mackenzie River has been awarded to Northern Construction Company, a division of Morrison-Knudson Company of Vancouver, the public works department announced today.

The firm will dredge about 220,000 cubic feet of loose material from the channel 70 miles downstream from Norman Wells, N.W.T. The channel will be widened to a minimum of 350 feet as a part of a program to improve it.

Goodyear Canada Has New Chief

TORONTO (CP) — Leland Spencer has resigned as chairman of the board, chief executive officer and a director of Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. of Canada Ltd., the board has announced.

The duties of chief executive officer have been assumed by H. Gordon MacNeill, president and general manager. He is a native of Sydney, N.S.

Russia Bans DDT

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has stopped production of DDT for use on food and fodder crops. Russian recently started showing some concern over the harmful effects of chemicals in agriculture.

Further Extension Of Power Corp. Offer

MONTREAL (CP) — Power Corp. announced Friday its offer to acquire a majority interest in Consolidated-Bathurst Co. has been extended to June 2.

The offer, made March 31, originally expired April 28 but was extended to Friday. The offer is an exchange of 2½ Power Corp. shares for each share of the giant pulp and paper company.

Wall St. Analysts Remain Hesitant

NEW YORK (WP) — The stock market bolted to its biggest one-day gain in two years Friday in a continuation of the rebound that began late Thursday afternoon.

Investment-grade stocks led the upsurge, sending the blue-chip Dow Jones industrial average, the market's bellwether indicator, to a gain of 17.43 points and a close at 702.22. It was the biggest one-day jump in the Dow since April 8, 1968, when the opening moves in the Paris peace talks propelled the average to a 18.61-point rise.

Although delighted by the upturn, Wall Street observers were reluctant to predict the end of the selling that has gripped the market for the past 18 months and picked up in momentum over the past four weeks.

Security analysts pointed out that the broad range of stocks, as measured by the Dow industrials, had fallen more than 46 points in five days before the upswing began on Thursday. After such constant selling, they said, some kind of rebound is normal.

They also pointed out that there has been no change in the gloomy psychology that has pervaded Wall Street as a result of the continuing inflation, the slow-down in business, poor first-quarter corporate earnings reports, the war in Southeast Asia and the upheavals in cities and on campuses. On Thursday, a former adviser to President Nixon told businessmen in Philadelphia that he is "frankly scared" of the conomic situation, which he characterized as "the most critical economic period we have ever been in."

Investment Firm in Commodities Field

By AB KENT

One of Canada's most conservative and respectable investment companies is turning to barnyards and cornfields in its search for investor opportunities that grow more elusive in the stock market.

Royal Securities Corp. Ltd., venerable Halifax-founded company now part of the world-wide Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith Inc. organization, will shortly form a Canadian division of its well established U.S. commmodities trading section.

Part of the reason is the rather uninspiring state of the equities and bond markets in this country, plus the feeling that Canadian investors represent an untapped potential for commodities trading.

SAME ADJUSTMENT

A Royal Securities source admits the diversification from blue chips and quality bonds into commodities futures will require some adjustment both for broker-salesmen and investors.

But orientation of local managers and salesmen within Royal Securites has begun. In addition, some trading in commodities has been done through the Canadian branches of Merrill, Lynch that were established before the takeover of Royal Securities a year ago.

Anything from cotton to copper, citrus fruits to soybeans, hides to hogs, barley to broilers, eggs to zinc, can be bought and sold in contracts handled on such North American markets as Winnipeg Grain Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade, Commodity Exchange Inc., N.Y., New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, Chicago Mercantile Exchange, Dallas Cotton and Commodity Exchange, Fort Worth Grain Exchange and the Memphis Board of Trade.

Trading also is done at a number of London markets such as the Metal Exchange, Fishmeal Terminal Market Association, Wool Terminal Market Association, United Terminal Sugar Market Association, and at the Midlands' Liverpool Cotton Association Ltd.

MARKET SOMEWHERE

Generally speaking, if there is a commodity for human consumption or for factory processing, there is a market for it somewhere.

In Canada the commodities trading business historically has been developed and maintained by one dealer, Winnipeg-based Richardson Securities, and is probably an outgrowth of cattle auctioning and grain marketing in the Manitoba city.

Merrill Lynch sees the prospect not only of well-fixed individual investors participating in commodites trading, but also of drawing industrial accounts where inventories may be an important consideration.

Through trading in commodities futures, a business may hedge its inventory requirements against market setbacks without the risks it would have to face through overstocking or second-guessing future prices.

Emphasis is given to a prospective trader's worth. Merrill Lynch must be satisfied that he has not only financial responsibility and could handle possible losses with equanimity, but also that he have the correct attitude toward futures trading. Three out of four applicants for a trading account are rejected.

This stringent policy puts Merrill Lynch in the awkward position of trying to drum up business while telling some prospects, politely, that they don't measure up.

Unlike the trading of common stocks and bonds, it is acknowledge openly and beforehand that a trader will encounter losses dealing in commodities. The successful trader, however, follows a set of rules that enable him to cut his losses and let his gains ride, so that he may have numerically more losses than gains but still come out ahead.

To the uninitiated, that will sound strange right off the bat, but still make good sense. The novice also may find it odd to put up at least $1,000 before he even starts trading, since trades are done on margin.

Canada, U.S. War On Same Malady

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Canada, too, is having its problems with inflation, which suggests that the persistence of this malady in the United States economy may not be solely the result of an improper approach to the problem.

Canada, however, is attacking the problem a bit more directly. Unlike the United States, where the defeat of inflation is expected to be a natural result of an economic slowdown, Canada is considering direct credit controls.

Moreover, the Canadian government already has developed a program of voluntary restraints on prices and wages that has met with some success during the last few months, although the exact amount cannot be measured.

Consumer price increases: In Canada, nearly five per cent; in the United States close to six per cent.

Unemployment: In Canada, slightly more than five per cent on an annual basis; in the United States, 4.8 per cent in April and rising swiftly.

CANADA PICKING UP

Industrial output: In Canada, continuing at a slow pace but showing signs of perking up; in the United States, at a standstill or even falling back some.

Budget: Canada's is in surplus, meaning that the government is restricting economic activity. The U.S. budget also calls for a surplus, but many doubts are arising about the feasibility of this in either the fiscal year of 1970 or 1971.

Perhaps the biggest difference is in the interpretation of economists. Many economists believe the U.S. is in the midst if a mild recession, based on declines in production. Canada's economy is still expanding.

The two economies are suffering from such similar problems, however, that the approach to the future in one country may have lessons for the other.

In Canada, the government is considering measures that would restrain the economy even more. Higher taxes are an outside possibility for later this year if prices and wages continue to rise.

That possibility becomes less remote when the wage situation is reviewed. New wage contracts have averaged nine per cene higher this year, threatening to put inflationary pressures beneath prices. Contract negotiations involve twice as many workers this year as last.

The biggest difference between the U.S. and Canadian approaches is in the attitude toward credit. The government of Prime Minister Trudeau has proposed consumer credit controls and legislation is planned for June.

SUBJECT AVOIDED

In the U.S., the Nixon administration has carefully avoided the subject of credit restraints or voluntary limitations on prices and wages. It hopes instead to reduce inflation through a restrictive Federal Reserve policy, by limitations on government spending and by taxation.

The Nixon policy has slowed economic expansion, but the slowdown has produced little effect on rising retail prices.

With the economy facing enormous pressures for additional spending, and with consumers said to be ready to spend again, some economists speculate that it may not be long before the Nixon administration reaches some of the same conclusions as the Trudeau government.

White Pass Orders Air Survey

An aerial survey for a White Pass and Yukon route rail extension north fron Whitehorse to the general area of Carmacks, in the Yukon, has started.

When making the announcement, A. P. Friesen, president of the White Pass, emphasized that the current survey does not mean that construction of a rail extension is due to start at this time.

The present survey is part of a continuing program of basic engineering and feasibility studies which we started five years ago," he said. "The results of this aerial survey will broaden, update and upgrade the information we have been gathering since 1965."

The survey is the first phase of a comprehensive four-phase program. Phase One will consist of air reconnaissance, aerial photography and map and photo study.

"No decision has been made at this time regarding the timetable for the remaining three phases," Friesen said.

The White Pass recently completed a $22 million expansion and upgrading program which included a second container ship, a complete deep-sea port facility at Skagway, Alaska to handle Yukon mine concentrates, larger locomotives and rolling stock, a new truck fleet, and a specially designed "tear drop" container to handle Yukon's concentrates.

The company has been a world leader in integrated ship-train-truck container operations since 1955 when it launched its first container vessel.

Bond Average Gains Fraction

The company said the average yield at April 30 was 9.36 per cent, up from 9.35 per cent at the end of March and 1.05 per cent from April 30, 1969.

Canadian and industrial groups rose .01 and .07 per cent respectively, while provincial and municipal groups fell .03 and .02 per cent.

Demand High For Exploration Rights in Arctic

OTTAWA (CP) — Mineral exploration rights covering 8,700,000 acres in the Northwest Territories have been granted so far this year, the northern development department has announced.

The announcement said the heavy demand for permits, coupled with a large number of permits granted in 1969, reflects new interest by mining and oil companies in a hunt for resources in the Melville Peninsula, Keewatin and Arctic islands regions.

Base metals and uranium are being particularly sought, the department said.

Permits are effective April 1 and valid for three years.

Where There's Smoke There's Rain — Scientist

A University of Washington scientist says rainfall has increased more than 30 per cent near Everett and Port Townsend in the last 20 years because of increasing mill operations on Puget Sound.

Dr. Peter Hobbs, associate professor of atmospheric sciences at the University of Washington, says researchers studying artificial rain-making and the mechanisms of cloud formations have discovered some industrial plants are seeding clouds inadvertently and thus causing increased rain.

Unintentional weather modification is being created by smoke from pulp and paper mills, sawmills with woodwaste burners and from aluminum smelters, says Hobbs.

Although the obvious effects of air pollution have been under study for many years, effects of air pollution on the weather have not been considered before, he added.

★ ★ ★

He explained the research program was carried out by plane flights over several industrial plants in the Puget Sound area. The study revealed paper mills in Everett and Port Townsend emit billions of sulphate particles per second. These particles have a high affinity for water and act as centres around which cloud droplets are formed.

In the areas immediately northeast of Everett and Port Townsend the average annual precipitation during the last 20 years has been more than 30 per cent higher than it had been during the preceeding 20 years.

He attributed this to the four-fold increase in operations of the mills in the Puget Sound area since the Second World War.

Among the areas Hobbs mentions as experiencing large increases in rainfall is Victoria. But Allan McQuarrie, in charge of the Victoria weather office, said today he doesn't have the figures to support the claim.

McQuarrie said it would take a great deal of verification to show any relationship between any increased rainfall and the location of area mills.

"There might be some indications of it. I'm not convinced there has been."

Smoke can have an influence on weather but weather does vary substantially over the years and care is required in interpreting differences.

"He may or he may not be right," McQuarrie said of Hobbs' claims.

★ ★ ★

"We still don't know the real basic causes of precipitation," he added and suggested the picture the American professor presents may be "rather over-simplifying the case."

He quoted Dr. B. J. Mason, director-general of the U.K. meteorological office, who speaking to a recent seminar in Toronto on the subject said:

"Unless and until weather scientists actually understand the natural dynamics of rainfall production — that is, the air motions that control rainfall — cloud-seeding by itself constitutes only a shot in the dark towards mastering weather modifications on any useful basis."

Principal Defies Trustees

A Victoria high school principal is urging teachers and other principals to boycott the school board's latest call for promotion and transfer applications.

Horace Dawson, principal of S. J. Willis Junior Secondary wants a united protest against the board inviting applications for major posts without specifying what positions are open.

"It shouldn't be done like so many pawns on a chessboard," he says.

In February the administration made a general call for applications to fill secondary and elementary principalships without detailing what was open. The board announced appointment or transfer of 10 principals earlier this week.

Dawson emphasizes that he is quite content with his present post and did not seek another. But he also is less than enchanted with the board's system of going beyond the school district in its search to fill senior vacancies.

He believes the board can do just as well from within the nearly 1,300 teachers in the Greater Victoria school district and it would be a lot better for their morale.

Both school board chairman Carron Jameson and trustee Peter Bunn, former chairman, emphatically disagreed with Dawson.

Schools were not specified in February to give flexibility to the appointments and the people who responded agreed to these terms, said Jameson.

The board's policy is to move principals from school to school where their talents can be used to best advantage.

"We hope at some future time teachers might be moved in a like manner."

Principals he has spoken to like the idea, said the chairman. They are concerned about growing stale if they remain in the same place too many years.

Bunn said he respects Dawson for being outspoken and courageous "but he's way off base on this one."

Both trustees defended the board's policy of searching beyond the district when filling senior posts.

All being equal between candidates, the one from the Greater Victoria school district gets the job, Bunn noted.

"Because the Greater Victoria school board is again playing the role of morale buster and exemplifying bureaucracy at its worst," says Dawson in a statement, "I'm challenging the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association to boycott the recent call for vice-principalships and other administrative posts in the district."

"This school district is woefully lacking in some vital needs," said Dawson. "The latest move toward secrecy in appointment and transfer of principals is a most deplorable and retrograde."

Stay Home, Sun Lovers

You have more chance of seeing the sun over Victoria than most places on Vancouver Island, the weatherman says.

There may be showers or it may get cloudy, but the sun is sure to peep through Sunday and Monday.

On the west coast of Vancouver Island at Long Beach it rained Friday and it is still raining today. The forecast is for showers right through to Monday.

Showers are reported at other east coast communities as a weather system moves southward.

To cope with large crowds, B.C. Ferries have increased their sailings for this weekend, though its summer schedule does not come into effect until June 5.

Starting from 7 a.m., the ferries sail from the Swartz Bay terminal every hour on the hour until 10 p.m. This schedule will also be in effect all day Tuesday.

The bus service via the B.C. ferries will leave every odd hour today, starting at 7 a.m. and ending at 9 p.m. On Sunday every odd hour untill after 11 p.m. From then on every hour.

On Monday and Tuesday, there will be a bus service every hour.

Headmaster Ends 22-Year Tenure

John J. Timmis, headmaster of University School, will retire in August of this year, Brig. F. N. Cabeldu, chairman of the governors, announced today.

Timmis, headmaster for 22 years, has seen the school enrolment increase from 53 to 175 boys.

At the time of his appointment the school was operating at a loss. Today it meets all yearly expenses and has reserve funds to carry out renovations and improvements.

He will be succeeded by Richard L. Gordon, 49, of Alberta, a Rhodes scholar.

He was headmaster of St. John's-Ravenscourt School, Winnipeg, for 17 years.

There was an enrolment of just over 60 boys when he started his duties there and when he left there were over 300 boys.

Old Buddies to Give Some Lift To Max and His Sunken Ships

By PAT DUFOUR

The skipper's been scuppered — and it was his sea legs that forced him to finally admit defeat.

Victoria's famous old sealing skipper, Max Lohbrunner has finally accepted the fact that life afloat for him is now a thing of the past.

But Lohbrunner will never accept the fact that his beloved whaler Green and the fishboat Mel on which he lived before she sank in January 1968 are doomed to remain in their watery graves in Victoria Harbor.

HARPOON GUN

The club's president, Capt. A. G. (Lofty) Coning says:

"We have Max's written agreement that the Green's old harpoon gun and mast is ours. I've talked to the admiral and I'm hoping that the diving school will carry out an exercise and recover them for us."

If this is done the gun will be given to the Maritime Museum and the mast will be erected at Fishtrmen's Wharf as a permanent reminder of Victoria's old whaler fleets.

Coning says that Lohbrunner has insisted that nothing else be taken off the aged hulk.

GARBAGE WHARF

Coning doesn't share her captain's conviction that Green can be salvaged.

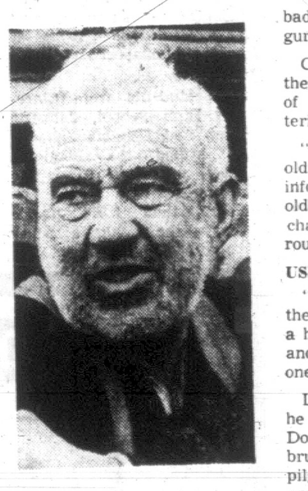
But he doesn't rule out the possibility of raising the 35-foot salmon troller which was Lohbrunner's home alongside the garbage wharf for 20 years.



LOHBRUNNER
. . . nothing else

"Max wants her up pretty badly because of the brass gurdies she has aboard."

Coning feels the sinking of the Mel has robbed Victoria of important historic material.

USELESS NOW

"They're useless now but they could have helped write a history of Victoria's sealing and whaling fleets, which no one has done."

Living in the home which he built for his bride at 1241 Dominion 58 years ago, Lohbrunner still makes regular pilgrimages to his vessels' graveyard.

He was at this week's meeting of the Thermopylae Club, still struggling for its survival.

And — if he losts — he still has three small boats in his basement to remind him of better days.

STUDENTS GET BREAK TO SHOOT MOVIES

The Greater Victoria school board is offering a summer course which will have young people probing social issues by assembling movies about them.

The National Film Board will contribute $1,000 toward the experimental program and Peter Grant, the film board's local representative, will be co-director of the course.

He hopes one of the workshops will be directed by Peter Jones the NFB's senior producer for western Canada and the man who produced the critically-acclaimed Helicopter Canada.

The $1,000 grant will be used mostly for movie film. The idea is to use stills as well as assembling visual studies of social questions:

Among proposed subjects for the lens:

Housing, citizen action, pollution, self-determination of low income groups, urban renewal, teen values, attitudes to urbanization, the drug scene, municipal decision-making, changes in education.

The program is called Challenge for Change and will run from June 15 to Aug. 18. For a fee of $1 those taking part will conduct the research and do the filming after a two-week training session.

"The intent is not to make them Fellinis but to give them an experience with film as a communications medium," says Grant.

"The National Film Board will be interested in viewing the results."

Hopefully, not just the film board.

"It is further envisioned that the finished material will be presented to or confront those who have the power to legislate change: i.e. school boards, municipal and provincial governments, business," says an explanatory note in the school board's brochure.

An organizational meeting will be held at 8 p.m. June 15 in Room 310, Institute of Adult Studies and training sessions will be held three evenings a week to the end of the month. Filming will start in July and continue three to eight weeks, whatever is needed to finish.

Grant said the training sessions will cover the philosophy of the program, legal and moral aspects and interviewing techniques.

A lawyer will discuss legal questions, two clergymen will examine ethics and a radio announcer will talk about interviewing.

Challenge for Change is part of the Summer Happening program of the school board's adult education division.

This is the third year for the summer program which has now expanded to offer 42 courses. Information is available from the adult education division at 592-1211.

Arthur Mayse . . .

ALL THE WORLD IS SUPposed to love a parade, but count me out. I've had it. And even though this scaly heart still quickens when the bands play and the floats roll past, I don't mean to be within sight or earshot of the Victoria Day extravaganza.

The name of my game is emancipation. It came slowly, and it took me quite a few years to realize that parade-going was no longer on the required list.

The parade habit is hard to break, especially if you have a feeling for clowns and bagpipes. But I've seen enough parades to last a lifetime, and the mere thought of standing for three hours while another passes sets my arches tingling.

A parade means distant parking, pavements to trudge, elbows in the ribs, and the endless-seeming wait until somebody hollers "Here they come!"

After all, I could be fishing, or planting Netted Gems, or just sitting in the sun, which always shines warm on parade day.

It's a long time since our young were of an age to be taken to Victoria Day parades, but I retain memories.

There was the drip-drip-drip of popsicle juice running down my neck. There was the drumming of little heels on my ribs as the child sitting on my shoulders registered excitement.

And there was also the parade when I got hit in the eye.

The pretty girls on a float were tossing oranges. Except one of them didn't toss . . . she slung an inside curve. It's hard to duck when you're jammed on all sides, and are clutching the ankles of the tot aloft.

Sympathy? All I got was "Daddy, why didn't you catch it?"

That is long past, and I don't know why we've kept right on going down to squander several hours on the annual spectacle.

Still, there's something about a parade. In spite of conviction, it's just possible I'll weaken when Monday comes. It may be hot, and the crowds will be thicker. But there'll be the sights and sounds I've mentioned, plus baton-twirling majorettes, high-stepping horses, and big bass drums grunting an undertone to the brasses.

Come to think of it, I can plant those spuds later!

For some years past, our Biritsh Columbia government has been evolving a peculiar new conservation doctrine. As a result of it, we have the elastic park which changes its boundaries and nature as industry dictates.

Strathcona is an elastic park. By an alphabet-soup game in which Class A rating becomes Class B and open to industrial intrusion—Strathcona grew smaller. Last year, timber rights on upwards of 5,000 Strathcona acres went to a logging company in exchange for 576 acres reaching back from the sea at Cape Scott.

As Vancouver Islanders understood the proceedings, that land was to form the nub of a sometime park.

We now learn that it may become an elastic park, because one tenet of conservation, B.C. style, is that what's in the ground must come out of it.

A wise government, and one with an eye to the future, would declare the area a park reserve. For whatever the value of ore bodies it may contain, it is worth infinitely more as protected parkland.

You won't find too many writers who can claim a novel up for publication this fall, and another scheduled for print next spring.

Dell Publishing Company of New York will bring out Covin's Hear That Train Blow (title changed from The Thirteenth Juor) in September.

Meanwhile, the Texas-born writer tells me he has won acceptance and a husky advance on royalties from the same house for a novel tentatively titled Many Broken Hammers. Covin's second novel is peopled by Spanish Americans in a Southwest setting.

He hasn't begun to put a third novel on paper yet—a Hollywood motion picture scripting stint may intrude—but when he does, it will probably have a Vancouver Island background.

That's it until Wednesday, and may the sun shine in spite of the weatherman!

45-Day Term For Disturber

A veteran of frequent appearances before Judge William Ostler, Frank Peter Ellis, 51, of Victoria, was sentenced to 45 days in jail Friday after he pleaded guilty to a charge of causing a disturbance by being drunk.

"I don't know of anyone," said Ostler," who has had more consideration from this court and has tried its patience so much."

Court was told Ellis had numerous convictions on similar charges this year, two of which have occured in less than a month.

Larry Howard Caton, Malahat Drive, convicted April of refusing to take a compulsory breathalyzer test and fined $250, was given an extension for payment of the fine by Magistrate Ostler because he has been locked out of his job for three months.

Caton said he had been unable to start the $50 per month payments May 1 as required because he had no job and little money.

"I would rather pay for it than do time (one month in jail)," he said.

"No one wants to take advantage of your misfortune," said Ostler, giving him until June 15 to make the first payment.

Four Marines To Be Tried For Murder

DA NANG (AP) — The U.S. Marine Corps said today it will try four young marines for murder in the deaths of 16 Vietnames civilians last Feb. 19.

Unofficial sources disclosed, meanwhile, that the Marine Corps also is investigating the alleged massacre of 38 other Vietnamese civilians by marines April 15 at Le Bac village, 12 miles southwest of Da Nang.

The four to be tried are charged in connection with the deaths of five women and 11 children near the village in Que Son Valley.

The four marines were held for investigation after the bodies of the civilians were found in the doorways of a cluster of thatched huts near the village, where a night ambush patrol of marines was operating.

Col. Robert M. Lucy, 1st Marine Division staff judge advocate, said the trials of the four would begin sometime in June but that the date had not been set.

Marijuana Less Harmful, Probe Told

HAMILTON (CP) — The Hamilton Academy of Medicine told the LeDain federal commission on drugs Friday that the majority of its members consider marijuana less harmful than alcohol or cigarettes.

But, the academy said in a brief 73 per cent of its members polled were against making the use of marijuana legal.

The members polled rated heroin the most harmful, followed in order by LSD, amphetamines, solvents—including model airplane glue—barbiturates, alcohol, cigarettes and marijuana.

Le Progres said the four Russians, who must leave the country by Sunday, engaged in "subversive activities" and had contacts with people in the information services, foreign ministry, the army and security services, as well with students.

Crowds Gather For Pop Festival

By STEVE HUME
Times Staff

MISSION — Early arrivals at the Strawberry Mountain Fair pop Festival nine miles east of this lower mainland town looked like a medieval army encampment early this morninr

Although promoters asked fairgoers not to arrive before 9 a.m., lineups at the gate were more than a mile long Friday night at midnight.

Cars were arriving from all over the western United States and Canada.

Within hours the isolated 50-acre tract of land set aside for the two-day festival which ends Sunday night had become a tent city.

There was a rag-tag atmosphere about the encampment as long-haired youths pitched colorful tents, made lean-tos, built fires and planted banners amlost like regimental colors.

This is where rock groups like Country Joe and the Fish, the Collectors and Spring will perform today and tomorrow.

Supporting the army of young people is a sophisticated complex of boutiques and food concessions. But even they do not appear to be able to handle the advance guard of an expected 30,000.

At 7 this morning lineups at hotdog stands were already 30 and 40 deep.

And on a dusty road that leads in from the Lougheed Highway lineups of cars were beginning to back up again.

Although no formal performances were scheduled Friday night promoters made their sound equipment available to which ever musicians wished to use it and spontaneous jam sessions sent chords of rock music echoing off the nearby mountains.

It went on until the early morning hours.

People who were not mingling freely in front of the stage were grouped around campfires that dotted the area.

Fairgoers included straight-looking American kids from Seattle who had driven up in their Camarros and mustangs, long-haired youngsters in motley attire who had hitch-hiked out from Vancouver and two or threeVancouver motorcycle gangs complete with iron crosses and chopped-down motorcycles.

At least one motorcycle group was assisting promoters in controlling and directing traffic.

RCMP who were in evidence at the entrance to the fairgrounds and assisted with traffic control Friday night to the fairgrounds and assisted with traffic control Friday night made no move to enter the grounds.

It was almost as though a moratorium had been declared on drug use for the two days.

Dope dealers wanderd through the crowd offering hashish and marijuana. Early this morning sales didn't seem to be going so well.

"The police only get heavy when they outnumber you. Unless they intend to bring in every policeman in the province there's no way they are going to bust anybody for dope at this fair," said one young man from Victoria who hitchiked over Friday night.

Although bright sunshine and soaring temperatures promised fine weather, there was almost a sense of boredom with the whole thing.

It was as though everybody had been to a rock festival once too often.

The fair itself was dedicated to a respect for ecology, but this morning graders were knocking down more trees and digging up more green grass to make parking spaces for the thousands of cars arriving.

Drapeau Hails Choice Of Montreal

MONTREAL (CP — Looking drawn and tired, Mayor Jean Drapeau returned from Amsterdam Friday and said the awarding of the 1976 Summer Olympics to Montreal "is a tremendous compliment to every Canadian from coast to coast."

Speaking to reporters after alighting from a commercial jet sporting an Olympic flag above its cockpit, Mr. Drapeau said:

"The International Olympic Committee's decision was a recognition of what Canada has done in the past, and can do in the future, for the sake of world fraternity and peace."

His reception at Montreal International Airport was warm and enthusiastic. A Marching band and an estimated 400 youngsters waving placards and flags blocked his route from the plane to the terminal.

The Games were awarded to Montreal Tuesday in Amsterdam.

While calling for the support of all Canadians, the mayor repeated his claim that Montreal will neither ask or need a "special" grant from the federal government to stage the Games.

Federal support would be sought for the planned Olympic Village which is to be converted into low-cost housing units after the Games are over.

Oil Research Aided

ALGIERS (Reuters) — Russian experts will help Algeria conduct research aimed at boosting its yearly oil production to 100,000,000 tons from the present 43,000,000. A contract signed here Friday night is between the Soviet Techno-export organization and the Algerian state oil and gas company, Sonatrach.

Island Trains Backed by AVIM

It also urged that the departure point be changed, from Victoria to an unnamed upper Island point.

The resolution was adopted without discussion by the 37 delegates attending the afternoon session of the day-long annual convention at Oak Bay municipal hall.

The dayliner passenger service, run by Canadian Pacific's subsidiary E and N Railway, is threatened with closure. CPR has applied to federal authorities to drop passenger service because it is uneconomical.

DUNCAN SPONSOR

The resolution presented to AVIM, sponsored by Duncan, said it is the opinion of many communities that the railway operation "as presently operated" is not sufficiently competitive but could be an asset and of valuable service.

The association will petition both CPR and the Canadian Transport Commission.

Delegates approved a resolution endorsing federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis' suggestion that Georgia Strait be designated a national park to maintain it as a recreation area free from pollution of industrial development.

Oak Bay Ald. Douglas Watts was opposed, saying implications had not been thought out and describing it as a "motherhood" resolution.

Part of the sea off Oak Bay had been incorporated into the municipality so it could regulate speed boats.

"If we endorse this resolution we'd be saying this is federal property," he said.

"We have not listened in any way to the provincial government."

Because municipalities run sewage outfalls into the strait, the federal government would insist on its pollution standards, in addition to B.C. ones, so there would be an escalation of administration and confusion.

"Will the frequency of ferry service depend on the federal parks department," he wondered.

LUCK IMPROVES

Watts had better luck in attacking a Duncan resolution which sought to petition the provincial government to levy a surtax on raw materials in an amount sufficient to remove all costs of hospitalization, education and social welfare from property taxes.

He said it was a "poorly thought out resolution." If such a proposal is to be made, it must be sound and not cripple exports. Other delegates agreed and the resolution was defeated.

In other resolutions, delegates agreed:

- To ask the provincial government to amend legislation to permit acquisition of regional trails:
- To ask the provincial government to provide legislation to anable regional districts to take on the function of conservation programs;
- To urge the provincial government to proclaim legislation to enable regional beverage containers.

Next year's meeting will be held in North Cowichan.

CAPITAL SCENE

The Greater Victoria Association on Alcoholism will hold its annual meeting and election of officers Wednesday, May 20, in the First United Church. Dr. H. L. Kemke will discuss the problems of alcoholism.

The Administrative Management Society will hold its annual meeting and election of officers Tuesday, May 19, at Holyrood House, 5:30 p.m.

The Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce board of directors will be meeting in the Charlotte and Albert Room, Empress Hotel, Friday, May 22 at noon.

The Medical Office Assistants Association of Southern Vancouver Island will meet in the Royal Jubilee Hospital lecture room Wednesday, May 20 at 8:15 p.m. Dr. L. N. Roberts will be guest speaker.

Dust Flies Off Revered School Play

The scene is a squalid courtyard in a Mexican Villa and the characters include a number of unshaven revolutionaries festooned with bandoliers, muttering under their sombreros.

That's something like the scene Shawnigan Lake School is using instead of the Roman senate for their Latinized version of Shakespeare's Julius Caesar — renamed "Julio Cesar."

Says a school press release: "Textural changes have been minimal: the change has been made to bring out the universality of ideas with which the play deals as well as to blow the dust off one of the more revered school texts."

The 100-member cast from Shawnigan Lake School and Strathcona Lodge School brings the production into Victoria May 20 and 21 for presentation at the McPherson Playhouse.

Six Killed On Eve Of Election

SANTO DOMINGO (Reuters) — Six persons were killed and at least 10 wounded in isloated acts of terrorism in the Dominican Republic on the eve of today's general election.

Two soldiers, two policemen and two civilians were shot dead in various parts of the country for political motives.

The victims brought the death toll to at least 66 since the election campaign began three months ago.

Observers did not expect polling to be affected by any large-scale disturbances, although sporadic violence was likely.

About 1,500,000 voters are expected to choose between incumbent President Joaquin Balaguer and four challengers, Balaguer is heavliy favored for re-election.

The first election campaign since the withdrawal of the U.S. and Latin American occupation force in 1966 officially ended Friday and all political activities were prohibited until after the polls close.

Mercury Forces Fish Bans

QUEBEC (CP) — Commercial fishing will be banned starting at midnight Sunday night on the Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers between Hull and Trois-Rivieres, Que., because of mercury pollution, it was announced Friday.

A government statement said the decision was taken following analyses undertaken jointly by the federal government and the provincial department of tourism, fish and game.

Hull is opposite Ottawa on the Ottawa River and Trois-Rivieres is 90 miles downstream from Montreal on the St. Lawrence.

Although the ban does not extend to sport fishing, the government recommended caution in eating fish taken in sport fishing in the affected waters.

Regular analyses of the water were to continue.

Berliners Go East for Pentecost

BERLIN (AP) — West Germans, but not West Berliners, will pour into East Berlin this weekend for family reunions on the Pentecost holiday.

The West Germans are allowed to go through the Berlin Wall, but West Berliners are barred. For four years, West Berliners as a group have been shut out because of West Berlin's refusal to recognize East Germany.

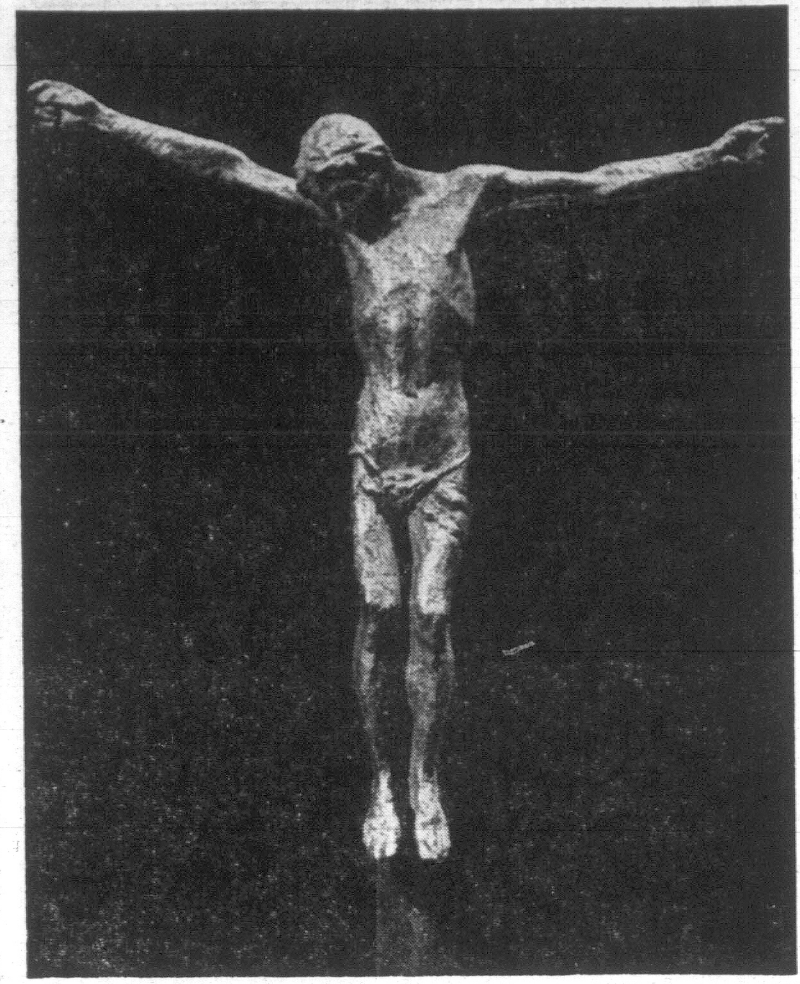
Religious Beliefs Not Dying, They're Just Changing Forms



By ARNOLD TOYNBEE
The Listener

From a British Broadcasting Program

TOYNBEE

As I see it, religion is a built-in feature of human nature; it is an inevitable accompaniment of the consciousness that is mankind's distinctive characteristic.

We are aware that we have awakened to consciousness in a universe that is mysterious to us; and the heart of the mystery has not been brought to light by the progress of scientific knowledge.

Today we are as much in the dark as ever about how or why (if there is any reason why) we have come to be what we are. We are painfully aware that our human nature is an incongruous combination of two discordant elements: the animality that we share with all other living creatures from our fellow-mammals down to bacteria, and a spirituality that is, we think, uniquely human.

We're Different

Our human spirituality makes us human beings something different from other animals and something more than what these are. Our human experience informs us that the universe in which we find ourselves is not solely material and biological.

There is also a spiritual presence; and this prestige is 'beyond' and 'above' both the universe and ourselves. (I say 'beyond' and 'above' because we have only a spatial vocabulary for describing spiritual realities.) Since we are human and therefore conscious, we feel a need to establish communication with this 'higher' spiritual presence.

We want to get into touch with it in order to bring ourselves into harmony with it. The impulse to meet this need is religion; and I believe that, for a human being, to have religion is inescapable. A human being may believe sincerely that he has no religion, but in moments of crisis his religion will assert itself.

Spiritual Plane

When he is confronted with his own imminent death, or when he is afflicted with bereavement, disappointment, self-reproach or any other form of acute spiritual suffering, he will find himself living, even if only for a moment, on the spiritual plane which he has tried to dismiss as an illusion.

I therefore feel certain that there is a future for religious belief. So, for me, the question is: What kind of religion is likely to prevail in the future for so far as we can see ahead?

Ever since our ancestors became human, we have been groping for the spiritual presence behind the universe. We have been trying to comprehend its character, and we have also been trying to live in harmony with the character of this higher spiritual presence, in what ever form we have caught our glimpses of it.

The glimpses are the crux. They have given very different pictures of the ultimate spiritual reality in different times and places. These different pictures have been reflected in different religious beliefs, and these different beliefs have led to different precepts and practices. Thus, several different kinds of religion compete for our adherence.

To which of the competitors are we going to give our allegiance in this next chapter of mankind's history? This is, for me, the capital question.

Man's earliest glimpse of the spiritual presence behind the universe was caught through the medium of non-human nature. When our ancestors awoke to consciousness, they found themselves at the mercy of their non-human environment.

Control Destiny

Here, then, as they saw it, lay the power which controlled their destiny and to which they must therefore accommodate themselves.

The higher presence reveals itself dramatically in thunder and lightning and in earthquakes and tornadoes, and, perennially, in winds, rain and the seasons, in springs and rivers, in forests and mountains, and in man's own prey and crops and cattle—for even these were only partially under the control of the earliest hunters and cultivators and shepherds.

Man's vision of ultimate reality through the medium of non-human nature faded away as man mastered nature progressively, and the nature-worshipping kind of religion might have seemed dead and buried for good in the modern age. In this age, man has succeeded in reversing his original relation to nature.

At the start, man was nature's slave: today, nature has become man's slave. But at this moment of our technological triumph we are just beginning to realise that nature has enough divine power in her to be able to take her revenge on us for the violence that we have done to her.

We have discovered that we are in nature's hands after all; that nature is a less cruel mistress than technology; and that, if we continue to violate nature, we may extinguish our species. For the sake of self-preservation, we may be going to recapture something of our reverence and respect for nature.

We may be going to recognise that, after all, nature is one of the media through which we need to seek our contact with the ultimate spiritual reality that is beyond both nature and ourselves.

Asia to Lead

I expect to see this recovery of a regard for nature come first in Eastern Asia; for there it has never been wholly lost. It survives, for instance, in present-day Japan, though Japan is now outstripping the West in the development of technology.

If this guess is right, it may be important since, in the next chapter of history, Eastern Asia seems likely to play the leading role that Europe played during the last few centuries.

The religion that has supplanted nature-worship — but this, I hope, only temporarily — is the worship of human power. As soon as we human beings began to get the upper hand, we also began to imagine that the clearest manifestation of ultimate spiritual reality was through ourselves.

Human power is multifarious. It is both collective and individual, both political and economic.

The worship of human power has therefore taken the diverse forms of worshipping Pharaoh or Caesar; worshipping communities, states, churches and other institutions; and worshipping technological power — 'atoms for genocide' as well as 'atoms for peace'.

Human Power

The worship of human power in some form has been man's predominant religion for at least the last 5,000 years, and it has never before been so dominant as it is today.

Nationalism is about 90 per cent of the religion of about 90 per cent of the present generation. The other 10 per cent goes to the worship of technology, but we can forsee that, in the next chapter, technology-worship is going to drive nation-worship off the field.

Nation-worship is divisive, but technology has united the whole surface of our earth to serve either as an arena for genocide or as a common home for an affluent human race.

It seems likely that our present worship of Britain, Nicaragua, France, Laos and the rest of the 125 present local states will be superseded by the worship of a world-community.

Today all but a tiny fraction of mankind adheres nominally to one or other of the religions that aim at direct communication and harmony with the ultimate reality. The surviving religions of this kind, enumerated in the order of their age, are Buddhism, Judaism, Parseeism, post-Buddhaic Hinduism, Christianity and Islam.

A Sham

The nominal adherents of these six religions add up, together, to an overwhelming majority of the human race. Avowed worshippers of human power —i.e. fascists and communists—are still relatively scarce; avowed nature-worshippers are now even scarcer.

But this conventional picture is misleading. Most of the nominal adherents of the higher religions can be counted out. Their adherence has become a sham.

They may still adhere with their lips to Christianity, or Buddhism, or whatever their ancestral higher religion may be, but in their hearts they are now worshippers of human power—the regimenting power of a state, a church, or some other institution, or the nature-conquering power of technology.

Are our ancestral higher religions going to be superseded in fact by the worship of human power? Or are they going to recover the hold that they once had on the majority of mankind?

Mutual Hostility

The answer to this question depends on the answers to two others. Will these religions succeed in extricating their essential beliefs and precepts from elements in their traditional creeds and practices that are non-essential and that have become unacceptable today?

And will they succeed in overcoming their traditional rivalries and enmities with each other? This second question is bound up with the first, because the historic religions' mutual hostility is part of the non-essential tradition of each of them.

In the modern age, one of the most hidebound of all the surviving higher religions has been the Roman Catholic section of the Christian Church, and the present upheaval in the Catholic Church is therefore particularly interesting and significant: if the Catholic Church succeeds in rejuvenating itself, we can be optimistic about the prospects of all the other institutions in which the various forms of higher religion are incorporated.

Resurrected

The work of rejuvenation is being contested, but we may guess that the opposition to it will be overborne, and that the Catholic Church — and the other contemporary religious institutions likewise — will come out of the present upheaval, not wrecked, but resurrected.

If this is the outcome, we may expect, as a result, to see the historic higher religions regain an effective hold on many of those nominal adherents of theirs who at present are nationalists or scientists at heart, even though they do not admit, even to themselves, that their real religion is not the one that they profess.

All the historic higher religions will regain credit if, besides putting their own houses in order, they overcome their traditional animosities towards each other. In the post-Christian world, for the last three centuries, odium theologicum has been a byword.

The rancor of the different historic higher religions towards each other has been surpassed only by the mutual bitterness of the warring sects within each of them. Probably nothing has done as much as this to bring religion itself into disrepute.

Happily, one of the few promising turns that human affairs have taken since the Second World War has been the ecumenical movement, and, happily again, this impulse towards reconciliation has not been confined to the different branches of the Christian Church. There has been a parallel rapprochement between the different sects of Buddhism, and between the different higher religions themselves—for instance, between Buddhism and Hinduism, between Judaism and Christianity, between Christianity and Islam.

Esteem, Love

The desirable relation between the different religions and between their different sects is mutual forebearance, rising to charity, esteem and love. This is the heart of the matter.

It is not necessary that the different sects and the different religions should coalesce, if they can manage to remain separate without remaining at enmity with each other. Indeed, in the field of religion, multiplicity and variety may be positively good.

So, is there a future for religious belief? I feel sure that there is. I do not feel sure that the religion of the immediate future is going to be a religion of the highest kind.

We may succumb to the worship of human power, which, in my judgment, is an authentic form of religion but an evil form of it. Or the historic higher religions may regain the ground that they have lost.

They seem unlikely to make this recovery unless they rejuvenate themselves, and, if they fail to rejuvenate themselves, they will, I fear, be supplanted, in everything except name, by the evil worship of human power.

If that happens, the outlook for mankind will be dark: but my expectation is that the higher religions will be rejuvenated and will then prevail.

They Want to Be Airborne Again

By ART STOTT

Some of the old Victoria Y boys who made Canadian Olympic and Commonwealth Games teams, and some of the still older boys who made the Victoria Y, gathered at dinner Thursday night to honor Bruce Humber. Bruce steps into British Columbia's Sports Hall of Fame at the Banquet of Champions in the Vancouver Hotel Tuesday evening, along with former Victoria Y boys Art Chapman and Bill Parnell. In that select company they join a number of other old Victoria Y boys.

★ ★ ★

Bruce sprinted for Canada in the 1936 Berlin Olympiad on the team coached by Archie McKinnon and later coached the Canadian track team at Helsinki in 1952, while Archie was coaching the swimmers. These were incidents in a still continuing association between the two men. They accounted for the substance of the main talk Bruce gave at the dinner. From his mouth it became largely a testimonial to Archie. The people present were in an excellent position to understand why. The ex-national champions and near-champs there were McKinnon proteges.

In addition to paying a well-deserved tribute to Bruce, the dinner, organized by the current Y physical department, sought to revivify the old Flying Y clubs that flew to provincial and national eminence in time past. Of recent years, Y athletes haven't been winning many major track and field or swimming laurels.

Making champions is not, of course, the primary purpose of the Y. The objective is more specifically aimed at giving a rounded development to the young membership. Better a thousand youngsters learn to swim than that one become a gold medalist. But the gold medals help. They improve the image, give boys and girls a goal to aim for and bring the club—and hence the Y — highly valuable publicity.

Humber, and McKinnon who introduced him, reminded the group of the means by which the champions were made. Their facilities were minimal in this town. But when the best performers hit the peaks, made Canadian teams and competed internationally, they came back to Victoria and helped coach Y youngsters. They gave their time, the benefit of their experience and technical knowledge to the kids.

They were, they thought, discharging a debt, paying back something for what they had received. The kind of help they had been given had not been measured in dollars. It had been the kind that came from dedication, the sacrifice of time and a huge expenditure of encouragement, enthusiasm, loyalty and that indefinable attribute of leadership which welds team spirit.

One of them remembered the hour or more a day Archie took off from what should have been a break for relaxation and dinner, to coach a young diver at the Crystal Garden because there was no springboard at the Y. Others recalled unlimited time spent in the steamy little pool in the old building, with burgeoning competitors swimming around its edges because it was too small for up and down lengths, or club nights at the Garden where space was available for better practices.

For some of them, recollection recaptured summer evenings on the lumpy rugby field at Victoria High, where sprinters, distance men, jumpers and field specialists pounded out the conditioning and techniques that brought them to the top.

Fresh to mind came the young people who had helped Archie, taking over the various loads in swimming and track. Bruce was one of them. Their number is too large to list, but they are remembered and respected.

They didn't have any money to speak of. On occasion races were delayed while the competitor in the event just completed shed his spikes so the competitor in the one coming up could use them. And Lynn Patrick's old track shorts used to come flying in ahead of Lynn's new ones when Joe Addison wore the discards. That was the way it went.

Thanks to Bruce, Archie, Bob Hutchison and a host of others we have good track facilities now. Affluence has provided competitors with the necessary equipment. And the Y hopes to start flying again. To help finance the rebuilding it is creating a special sponsors' club. Anybody with five bucks can contribute. Most of us hope it works.

★ ★ ★

We remember, though, that when the old Flying Y was airborne, it flew almost without financial fuel, and we remember also that the hungry athlete, provided he isn't emaciated, is often the one who fights his way to the banquet of champions.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

A Sermon on Sermons

By Rev. J. A. DAVIDSON

Many years ago an eminent Scottish preacher, Dr. Norman Macleod, prefaced a sermon with this little prayer: "O Lord, teach us to remember that for every sermon we hear we must render an account at the Day of Judgment."

Preachers, of course, should render account for all the sermon they preach — and that ought to keep us preachers properly humble about our performance. But is it fair to suggest that hearers of sermons are also somehow accountable?

Many of you never listen to sermons — and so there is no hook here which you have to get off. And most of you who do hear sermonds prpbably feel that it is all the preacher's responsibility and that is a sermon fails it's all his fault.

FOUR HINTS

It is probably terribly presumptuous for me to do this, but I am now going to give four hints on listening to sermons, which I hope will help put this matter into a realistic perspective.

First: Try to understand the nature and purpose of Christian preaching. By New Testament and traditional standards, a sermon is not merely an edifying chat or lecture which may or may not be helpful in some way to its hearers.

A sermon is essentially a proclamation of the Gospel message and an exercise in clarifying and stimulating faith and pointing up its practical implications. It should, of course, be relevant to the concerns of life today — but it must be rooted in biblical faith.

You may have other standards for judging sermons — but this one is fundamental.

Second: The sermon is itself an act of worship and not merely an accessory to worship, not simply the Big Number (or the Boring Interlude, as your taste decides) put into a setting of prayers and readings and music.

BRAVO NOT NEEDED

But a sermon is not a performance or oratorical display. An effective sermon, an authentic sermon, is not one which impels its hearers to exclaim, "What a splendid preacher!"

Rather, it is one which leads its hearers to prayer and self-dedication, to renewed determination to serve the Christian cause in the world.

Third: Carefully examine your conscience before you critically slice up a sermon and its preacher. I would not challenge the pew-sitter's right to criticize sermons: that little game can add an element of jollity to Sunday luncheons.

And we preachers do deserve much criticism. But you hearers must not assume every time you don't like a sermon, or certain features of it, that the preacher has failed.

Christian preaching will sometimes have a directness and a demandingness which are not pleasing to comfortable, self-satisfied people. There is challenge as well as comfort in the Gospel, and the faithful preacher will sound both notes.

CHECK YOURSELF

We preachers are often incompetent and ill-informed and arrogant — but before you decide that on a particular occasion those afflictions have been shown by your preacher, take a clear look into the depths of your own conscience.

My fourth and final hint is this: When listening to a sermon keep one ear at least sensitive to the divine echoes. I am not suggesting that the clergy have special communication facilities with heaven, that God endows preachers with supernatural wisdom.

The point I would make here is that God can get through to you in a sermon despite the ineptness and the prejudice and the folly of the preacher. Listen for the echoes in a sermon: they are probably more significant that the preacher's direct statements.

Priest Wants Passion Play Revised

OBERAMMERGAU (AP) — Julius Doepfner, archbishop of Munich, marked the opening today of a controversial Passion Play by calling anew for a revision of the text to bring it in tune with the times.

Speaking at a sunrise service in the 230-year-old church in this West German village, the cardinal also took issue with charges that the play was anti-Semitic.

Calling for a revision when the next Passion Play is staged in 1980, the cardinal said the text should bring out more clearly that the Jews bear no collective guilt for Christ's death and those depicted in the story of Christ's Passion represent all of mankind.

Arabs Say CBC Biased

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — The Canadian Arab Federation opened a three day conference here Friday claiming the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is biased in its coverage of the Middle-East situation.

Ali Jabara of London, convention chairman, said the CBC has consistently taken the side of Israel in its coverage because of the influence of Zionists in the organization.

Dr. George Haggar of Toronto said the federation is against anti-semitism but must join forces to combat Zionism and promote the Arab cause.

CO-OPERATE IN TRAINING SAYS VATICAN

VATICAN CITY (AP) — In a Christian unity move, the Vatican said Friday that Roman Catholics and Protestants should co-operate in the training of priests and ministers.

The cardinal, as head of the Vatican's Christian Unity Secretariat, is the Vatican's top authority on the efforts to bring the Roman Catholic and other Christian churches closer together.

The Vatican urged "a shared use of books and libraries." It also called for the "cutting down of useless or duplicated courses."

Pope Paul Lashes Belgian Cardinal

VATICAN CITY (AP)—Pope Paul lashed out Friday at Belgium's Leo Cardinal Suenens and others who have accused him of running the Roman Catholic Church in an authoritarian manner.

The 72-year-old pontiff said he received the criticism with "sorrowful amazement."

In an interview with the Paris newspaper Le Monde May 12, he suggested that this papal stand ignored the principles of collective decision-making laid down by the 1962-'65 Vatican ecumenical council.

"We take great account of the council as a precious gift of the Holy Spirit," Pope Paul retorted in a speech to the central committee of the world bishops' synod.

Without mentioning Cardinal Suenens by name, the Pope said: "Contrary to what has been said in these days, to our sorrowful amazement, we try to be respectful toward the collegiality sharing of authority of the bishops."

The Pope said the Belgian prelate's remarks "do not seem to conform to the brotherly style urged by collegiality itself nor to the nature or the gravity of the problems which . . . are being studied by responsible and competent authorities."

Y BACK-SLIDES

OTTAWA (CP) — The national president of the Young Men's Christian Association wants "the over-50s, like myself," to give up control of the organization.

In his retiring statement to the organization, released Thursday, John J. Carson says that despite the apparent success of the movement, "we seem to be back-sliding in our primary purpose of working with young people."

He noted that in 1948 the age group from 18 to 29 comprised more than one-third of the Y's membership. By 1968 it had dropped to one-quarter.

"The only effective course of action is giving our young people a real voice in the decision-making process of this movement."

Carson, also chairman of the Public Service Commission of Canada, ends his term as YMCA national council president at the organization's annual meeting which starts here May 21.
